CLAUDE NIGHT;

OR,

A BLACK MASK AND A WHITE FACE.

CHAPTER XXXV.

THOSE RINGS—THE INTERVENING FOURESS—THE MASKED BALL—NELL GWYNNE AND LORD ROCHESTER—THE MYSTERIOUS SUGGESTION.

If Claude Night had not been so desperately enamored of fair Ethelind of Castlefort, my lady Portsmouth would scarcely have led the quiet life she did with those rings still in her possession. Had the stern, determined highwayman not fallen under the fascination of this strange woman—or, rather, girl—in a manner that made him listen to her advice and obey her wishes as he had never done before to mortal being, he would not have retired so quickly from the scene, and left the guilty duchess in such blissful security. When he vowed vengeance on her, he meant it, and he would have moved heaven and earth to punish her cruel deception had it not been for the command of Lady Castelfort. Is there any chain so strong as the power of love? We trow not. Claude believed implicitly in the truth of Ethelind's friendship for him. He loved her with all the intensity of his strong nature, although he believed his love was hopeless; and he was quite content to obey her desire, though it interfered with his own future schemes of action. Truth to tell, this quiet conduct of his puzzled the Duchess of Portsmouth considerably. Knowing the fierce, vindictive nature of her former lover, she expected that he would have endeavored to find some means of avenging himself; and it was this fear, or rather expectation, that in the beginning of the affair had induced her to confide in her usual confidant, Henry Claverton, so as to have some male supporter at hand should Claude's vengeance make it necessary. As time went on, however, and she heard nothing of the highwayman, her courage, never long depressed, rose daringly. The matter of the ring troubled her but indirectly, and her intrigues were all centred on securing the favor of the King, and involving her new and youthful enemy, Mistress Nell Gwynne. She was so far successful as to keep Charles her slave, but not sufficiently so as to effect Nell's banishment. There was something too alluring in the sweet merriment of the blue-eyed beauty for the King to give her up for even Henrietta's fascination, and the Duchess hated her with all the intensity of her intense nature. The visit which had recently taken place did not soften this hatred, though it relieved the mind of the fierce schemer. At any rate, Nell was no match for her in a war of wits. She had nothing to fear from her plotting. Lady Portsmouth was quite correct in this—sweet Nell Gwynne was no subtle schemer; but she was warm-hearted and grateful, and sometimes these qualities served her friends better than wit would have done. When the Duchess left her, after that marvellous visit, Nell Gwynne quite wept with vexation at her own stupidity in having allowed to escape her all that she had. That Lady Portsmouth had obtained information which pleased her Nell felt sure, though what its exact nature was she could not decide. That the name of Henry Claverton had something to do with it, she guessed, but that it would injure the cause she wished to protect she felt certain. Never in her life had she felt so annoyed or perplexed. What to do she knew not. Lady Castelfort was as lost to her as she was to the rest of the world. With Claude Night, even, she knew not, at the moment, any means of communication, and so she felt left to her own resources. There was a masked ball at Lady St. Kildare's that same night, and though she felt scarcely in spirits to attend, she knew Charles would expect to meet her, and perhaps for the first time since she had been the favorite of the King she felt afraid to vex him, or to leave the way open to her rival. Her spirit was roused. No! that insulting woman should not triumph over her! She might not be her equal in keenness of intellect, but, for all that, she would battle with her, and try to support a cause which was just. Nell's beautiful face never looked lovelier than as she stood watching her fire woman's active fingers adorning her for that ball. It was a pity to slip on the mask, but the blue eyes shone through like stars of heaven, and made it scarcely difficult to recognise the celebrated beauty in spite of the more than ordinary pains she took to disguise herself. The balls of the Countess of St. Kildare were of the most luxurious description, and [illegible] were invited amongst others, as was not uncommon, because the hostess cared more for royal smiles than strict morality. As Nell entered, in the fantastic dress of a Venus, a scene of dazzling beauty met her gaze—a scene which not many months ago would have bewildered the young orange girl, but to which the mistress of the Merry Monarch was already so accustomed that in the frame of mind she was then in she turned away from with almost loathing. Why, she scarcely knew, but somehow that night she thought of Claude Night with a regret that partook of all the passion with which she had regarded him, before the ambition of being a King's favorite had proved too much for her fidelity. Ah! Charles Stuart was very good to her—he surrounded her with luxuries, the very name of which she had till then not known—but he never could be to her what the handsome, daring highwayman had been! Never had her heart thrilled at the loving flattery of her royal lover as it had at the simplest word uttered in Claude's deep, earnest voice.

And then, as she looked round at the glittering throng—as she paused and listened to the free and gallant speech some one of the courtiers, who had recognised the blue-eyed Venus, was whispering in her ear, she almost shivered to think how impossible all that was now to be recalled. Even Claude himself would reject her love now as worthless.

"Venus is strangely out of sorts this even, methinks," said Rochester's voice, as he approached the window where she was standing, looking out on the broad, tranquil river. "Has the fair goddess been quarrelling with her awkward spouse, or is it Jupiter who offends in his baldness?"

For a wonder, Nell Gwynne did not take up the humor of the speaker, but turned impatiently away. Rochester laughed lightly. "Marry, but I meant no offence, sweet Nell!" he said, lowering his tone, and bending down towards her. "What ails you? I have been watching you as the sundower watches the sun, ever since you arrived, and I am almost shivering at your icy demeanor. What has happened? Did the Portsmouth carry the day over the supper difficulty? Has the spaniel sickened, or——"

"Nought, my lord—nought! I am vexed and weary, and your wit jars!" interrupted Mistress Gwynne.

"My wit shall perish on the spot, then! Come, fair mistress, let me for once try sense—will't please you?"

"Perchance, my lord, the rarity, at any rate, will amuse me."

"Amuse! Is it possible merry Mistress Gwynne has absolutely reached the pitch of finding life dull?"

"Dull and perplexing," she answered; and then uttering one of her merry laughs, she added, "in truth, methinks, I'm out of humor."

"Then, do as is the fashion among the fair—vent it on your lover, or take a dose of the all-learned Haman's preparation."

"My Lady Portsmouth does that," Nell said, with a toss of her head. "Maude Neville told my woman she had awful fits of passion, but that some philtre Dr. Haman had given her soon restored her, and made her more wickedly fascinating than ever. That woman's a fiend, I believe!"

Rochester's handsome face clouded over for a moment; whether or not he was disgusted at Mistress Gwynne's words, or at some thought of his own, Nell knew not. Instead of going on in his usual gay, bantering tone, he leant down beside her, and meditatively looking out over the river, he exclaimed, "That Jew is a wonderful man!"

"Hey, my lord—you a convert! I thought you called him a bungling juggler—a poisoner, who ought to have been drawn and quartered long ago!"

Rochester replied by a dark frown.

"Methinks he is a terribly wicked man," Nell said, shuddering, and with a vivid remembrance of all that horrid scene in the dismal chamber prison of Portsmouth House.

"You have seen him, and know him, then?"

"A little, and for nought of good. And you! What has Rochester had recourse to him?"

Nell spoke rather louder, and Rochester looked round, muttering "Hush!"

"Ah!" he exclaimed, as he bent down again. "There is the King; is your fair ladyship very impatient to greet him, or will you give me just five minutes, still, behind this curtain?"

It was something so rare for the young nobleman to speak with any gravity, especially to one of the fair sex, that Nell's curiosity was roused; and turning quickly, she said, "Certainly; I am in no haste, and the King will doubtless find amusement without me."

"Mistress Gwynne, have you any idea of what has become of Henry Claverton?" Rochester said, lowering his voice almost to a whisper.

"No," Nell answered, with a start. "Claverton! I have not heard of or seen him for ages!"

"Nor I, till——" He paused; and then fixing his dark, handsome eyes on her, with a meaning which, for once, lost its licentiousness in its anxiety, he added, "If you want news of him, go to the learned Jew—the pupil of Cagliostro."

And then, without a word of further explanation, Lord Rochester turned and disappeared amidst the gay, noisy crowd.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

WHAT OF HENRY CLAVERTON?—A WOMAN'S CURIOSITY—THE LEARNED JEW—NELL GWYNNE'S DETERMINATION—A STRANGE ABODE.

Want news of Henry Claverton—the man who had duped and led her into the power of the Duchess of Portsmouth! The idea had never entered her head.

What did the Earl mean? What could he mean by advising her to go to Obadiah Haman?

There was some mystery in it all, but what she could not, for the life of her, make out. It alarmed her, for Rochester was the familiar companion of the King; and if he had any idea of the real cause of hatred between herself and the Duchess, he would scarcely keep it from the royal ears. Had he? The question puzzled her beyond measure, and combined with her anxiety as to the result of the Duchess' visit that morning, made fair Nell Gwynne more out of humor than ever. She stood by the window, hidden by the heavy curtain, pondering the subject, and then, suddenly, it struck her that, after all if she could see Henry Claverton, she might learn more about the rings than she even would from Lady Portsmouth. When she had threatened him, and demanded the restitution of the stolen trinkets, he had undertaken to get them returned, she recollected. After all, Claverton might be the best person to go to again. To understand Rochester's strange words, and stranger manner, she did not even make an attempt, but did it strike her to act upon his advice.

Nell Gwynne was impulsive, though not particularly daring, and the impulse in this case happened to be strong enough to overcome her repugnance to renew her acquaintance with the grant, spectre-like Jew. The desire to be able to battle with her powerful and malignant foe also gave her additional courage and determination; and combined with the lingering tenderness for Claude Night, which made her intensely anxious to serve him, pretty Nell plucked up nerve, and made up her mind to seek some tidings of the lost Claverton. Had her mind been less agitated by the visit of her rival that morning, Rochester's mysterious words would scarcely have made much impression on her. Nell was not one to puzzle herself with mysteries. Any kind of intrigue which had aught but love and gallantry for objects, she detested, and usually kept from; but her mind was quite oppressed with the events of that day, and somehow she could not get the remembrance of Claude Night out of her head; so it was almost a relief to seize on the suggestion of Rochester—though she could not understand all the mystery of it—and do something which might, at any rate, seem as if she was still laboring in Claude's cause. It was rather a wild adventure, and certainly one which the subtle Duchess would have laughed to scorn; but Nell was quite satisfied with the possibility of its having a successful result, and without further calculation as to its prudence, directly she determined on it, she prepared to put it in practice. The window against which she stood opened on to a long, narrow balcony, and Mistress Gwynne knew enough of the house to be aware that at the furthest end it communicated with the window of a small antechamber. It was easy, therefore, to leave the ball-room without appearing among the dancers; and from the anteroom she could find her way to her sedan without difficulty. No sooner did she decide on this, than she was making her way along the narrow balcony to the window in question; and, in a few seconds, muffled in a large cloak, the dazzling Venus of the ball-room stepped into her chair, and was borne off through the dark streets in the direction of the learned Hebrew's den-like abode. To say that merry Nell felt perfectly easy would be untrue, but she descended from her conveyance a little before reaching the door, without any hesitation, and, desiring her attendant to wait her return, she drew her cloak more securely round her, and, tripping along, soon reached the tall, narrow, dark house, where the doctor and follower of Cagliostro lived. It was very late, and not a ray of light was to be seen about the place. The silence, too, was almost oppressive; and, as the rubicund knocker, Nell felt her heart beat with anything but pleasant excitement. Her summons was not obeyed for some minutes, and then the door was opened, and a voice from the dark interior asked who knocked, and what was wanted?

"Dr. Haman. Is he at home?" Mistress Gwynne asked, in a feigned voice, for she was resolved to preserve her incognito, if possible.

"And who demands him?" returned the person, with the peculiar nasal twang of the Israelite.

"One who would consult his science."

"He is engaged."

"I will wait, then; but I must speak with him."

"Enter, then."

Nell felt a little reluctant to cross the dark threshold, but it was too late now to draw back, and she stepped in, and heard the door closed behind her. The darkness was intense, and the air seemed hot and heavy, and perfumed with some strange essence; but the disgust it inspired her with was soon forgotten in the satisfaction of finding herself drawn gently behind a heavy curtain into a small and very ordinary apartment, where a lamp shed a comfortable light around. Nell had her horror of dark nooks, but this light restored a little of her courage. The person who had admitted her, she saw, was a tall, thin youth, whose features proclaimed him of the same race as his master, and whose deep set eyes regarded her with an expression which recalled too vividly the face which had bent over her in that terrible stupor, for her to encounter without an inward shrinking.

"Shall I have to wait long?" she inquired of this individual; as, apparently loth to leave her, he busied himself with the lamp.

"Peradventure, the doctor hath already received two strangers this even, and he bade me not disturb him again before cock-crow."

"Not before dawn! But it pleasures me not to rest here all night. Prithee, friend, go to him, and say—any I will richly reward his kind care if he will receive me soon." And then, with a happy thought, and certainly too Nell prudence, Mistress Gwynne suddenly drew off a rich bracelet, and putting it into the Jew's hands, she added, "And there—take that as an earnest of what may follow!"

The young Israelite's eyes sparkled as he held up the glistening jewels; but, without any comment, he turned his head and left the room. Nell had evidently hit upon the "open sesame," for, in a few seconds, the young man returned, and requested her to follow him up stairs to the learned doctor's presence. Were they ascending some Tower of Babel? These steps, winding round and round, seemed endless; and it was with her brain in a whirl, and her eyes so dizzy that she could scarcely see, that at length she stood before the door of what was called Dr. Haman's den.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

OBADIAH HAMAN—THE OCCULT SCIENCES—THE KING'S MISTRESS—THE BRACELET—NELL GWYNNE DECLARES HER ERRAND—HENRY CLAVERTON ENQUIRED FOR.

"Enter!" said a calm, rather sepulchral voice, in answer to Nell's faint knock. Pushing open the low, cross barred door, she obeyed, and certainly Mistress Gwynne's courage did not revive as she looked round her, or felt the glance of those sunken but strange eyes of Obadiah Haman fixed upon her. There was nothing very extraordinary in the room; it was handsomely furnished, and combined a confusion of chemical and surgical instruments, together with some immense volumes, over the open pages of one of which the learned Jew was apparently poring with considerable intentness as his masked visitor entered; but though there was something uncanny about it, there was nothing absolutely horrible. The doctor himself was, perhaps, the most fear-inspiring object. The cadaverous face, the gleaming eyes, the sardonic, snaky smile—ah, how instantly the horrified girl recognized them, and recalled the man who had bent over her with such barbarous indifference, and submitted her terrible agony to his awful science. For an instant or two the sight of him affected her so much, that though he arose from his seat, and approached her with the courtesy Dr. Haman always offered to a customer whom he expected to be remunerative, she could find no words to break the spell of her intense horror of him.

"May I entreat the honor of knowing who asks my advice?" said the Jew, softly, and at the same time drawing a large, curiously fashioned seat towards her.

"Is it necessary?" she replied, anxiously. "Can you not answer my questions without being informed of that? I would pay double—any price—"

With a wave of his bony, death-like hand, the doctor interrupted her.

"Enough, enough!" he said. "Say no more, but tell me what you seek. Is it my science as physician—an administrator to the fleshy ills, as a soother of woes of the mortal frame—that you come to me, or," and his hollow voice grew more hollow and unearthly, and his sunken, gleaming eyes seemed to glow up suddenly and surely—"or is it in a higher capacity, a more dread character that you would seek my aid?"

Nell Gwynne felt an uncontrollable trouble steal over her as the monotonous, dreary voice said this; and with some difficulty she gathered sufficient of his meaning to make an intelligible reply.

"It is not as a physician," she murmured.

"As a chemist, then?" said the reputed assistant of the beautiful Brinvilliers.

Nell looked up hastily, and almost fiercely.

"No, no!" she answered; "nothing of that! No crime—no wrong doing; only—"

"Only what? Why hesitate? What do you fear?"

Mistress Gwynne glanced uneasily around.

"You need have no fear of listeners. These walls alone could tell the tales of—of strange—confessions, that they alone have heard beside myself, and methinks even the most timid soul would scarcely fear a stone wall. Speak, madam, without restraint."

In spite of the courteous manner in which he stood before her, there was a touch of contempt in his tone which, frightened as she was, even Nell was not deaf to; and she roused, fearing that unless she displayed more decision, she would, after all, be disappointed in her object. Drawing herself up, therefore, with a sudden energy, of which she was quite capable on occasions, she exclaimed, "My hesitation arises more from the difficulty of explaining myself than from any fear. I come to do no wrong; my object in seeking you is far more innocent than is, I believe, that of the generality of your customers, and I have no fear of its being known from any evil which could result from it to myself, but——" The sweet, musical voice paused suddenly, and the learned Jew smiled.

"Ay, verily!" he said softly.

Again Nell felt as if some evil thing had sneered at her, and she went on more firmly.

"I would inquire of you concerning one of whom I have heard no tidings for some time—that is all. Does your science disdain such simple business, or is it too deep for the simplicity of your science?"

There was a momentary silence, during which a strange, exquisite burst of fairy-like music sounded through the apartment. Nell started to her feet; but, laying his bony hand on her shoulder, the strange Jew gently held her back till it ended. Then, with a smile, he answered, "You arrive opportunely, indeed. Two minutes earlier I could not have answered your question; less, still, performed your desire, for"—and again his voice sank into that monotonous, dreary tone, which seemed to weigh down her very soul—"it is not at all hours I can have recourse to my knowledge of the occult sciences."

"What mean you?" muttered the frightened girl, faintly.

"What you would know is not to be learned through chemistry, astronomy, or physics, generally; it is only the mysterious science which brings the spirit-world within the reach of those still under the shadow of mortality which can procure the information you require. Soul must speak to soul—intelligence to intelligence—mind to mind! The spirit must throw off the trammels of the flesh, and in its own essence seek its fellow!"

The mistress of Charles Stuart, fresh from the gorgeous scene of the bal masque, and the polished tones of the most licentious men of the day, listened to this strange speech with a bewilderment which vainly strove to comprehend its meaning. At the same time, though she understood not his words, the wild, unearthly fire burning in the old man's eyes as he bent down over her, muttering this—the earnest, thrilling tones of his low voice—the strange gesticulations with which he accompanied them, impressed her with an awe which she in vain endeavored to throw off.

"What was all this?" she questioned mentally. A thousand times did she repent that she had thus ventured into the presence of a being whose horrible power she had already experienced in her own sufferings. She had been foolhardy—mad! Feebly struggling to her feet, she half turned to the door. If she could but get out of that den she felt she would give anything. As if he read her thoughts, however, Dr. Haman placed himself between her and the arched doorway, and then, laying his bony hand persuasively on her arm, he again gently pushed her back into the chair.

"I am grieved that I alarm you, daughter, but I cannot help my science appalling those who view it for the first time. Have confidence, and shortly we shall understand each other."

"Confidence!" murmured poor Nell, with a slight shudder—"confidence in you!"

There was something in the tone that implied a terrible meaning, and the doctor drew back a step, fixing his eyes on her with a dark, inquiring glance.

"Daughter, I cannot do myself the injustice to affect to misunderstand you. I am well aware that I speak to Mistress Gwynne, and that she is the same person as the unfortunate and beautiful girl whom the malice of the Duchess of Portsmouth would have bought my aid to kill. I recognized you the moment you entered this room, and yet you see I do not fear to meet you, because—because, daughter,"—and the Jew advanced and spoke impressively—"I did you no wrong!"

"Ay," Nell answered, boldly, the memory of all that dreadful suffering recalling her intense horror of the man before her,—"ay, and who prevented it?"

"No one prevented me—no one could prevent me, unless I willed it. My lips are sealed by oaths, or I could lighten the mystery of all that dark history in a manner which would startle your true sense almost to death. But enough of this. Hours are fleeting, and I have other affairs on hand. If your confidence in me is so small, I exhort—nay, I will not bid you, though you offered me the jewels of Charles' crown itself! Behold, fair lady, the passage by which you entered! I would not be discourteous, but I cannot, for the sake of my high calling, submit to unseemly treatment."

As he spoke, he pointed to the door with his long, bony arm, in a fashion which, in spite of its gentleness, was almost threatening; and unimaginative as was fair Nell, she could not help shuddering as she thought how like some dark being from the nether world he looked. Still, alarmed as she was, she was woman enough to be unwilling to depart with her object unfulfilled; and also woman enough to feel almost indignant at being turned away so unceremoniously. If Dr. Haman wished to force her to remain, he certainly went exactly the right way to do so. Mistress Gwynne rose from her seat, but instead of advancing towards the door, she only threw back the large mantle, and permitted a magnificent bracelet, glittering on the fair arm, to come under the view of the learned Jew.

"You see that!" she said, pointing to the jewel. "Grant my desire, and I leave it in payment."

"But the words you have spoken—the distrust you implied——"

Nell turned impatiently away. "Had I not reason? But let the past be forgotten. We have now to do with the present."

"True!" answered the Jew, gloomily. "Well, daughter, name your wish."

Mistress Gwynne's courage had been gradually rising, for she feared she might not be able to succeed in her desire, and it had now reached the point which made it easy for her to answer boldly and positively.

"I want tidings of Henry Claverton!"

For an instant the Jew regarded her without speaking, with a glance which seemed as if it would pierce to her very soul. He did not seem startled or surprised, but, on the contrary, an expression of almost satisfaction gleamed for a moment round his mouth, and then settled into the calm, snaky smile which was habitual to him.

"I must see if this is yet possible," at length he said, in tones more sepulchral than ever. "Abide here and I will give you an answer shortly. Abide here awhile, daughter."

And then, pointing to her chair, he turned suddenly and disappeared behind a long, black curtain, hanging beside the seat he had formerly occupied.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

THE FAIRY WAITS—A GLOOMY VAULT—THE ACCURSED JEW—RAISING THE DEAD—A HORRIBLE SCENE—AN APPALLING CRASH.

This waiting did not suit fair Nell's humor, but she felt that to attempt rebellion against a being like Obadiah Haman was madness; so she sat patiently on the old fashioned chair, while the long minutes of midnight stole gradually on. The stillness was oppressive, and had it not been for an occasional noise in the street below, it would have made her unbearably nervous. As it was, she grew so anxious and excited that the faintest movement of the black curtain behind which the doctor had disappeared made her start and almost exclaim. Somehow, she did not feel personal fear—why, she could scarcely understand herself; but it seemed to her that the doctor was inclined rather to favor her than otherwise, and that she had nothing to fear from him. Never in all her life, however, did she get so weary, or find such a trial of her patience as that long hour; and never had she listened with such eagerness for any summons as she did for one from the strange Israelite. It came at length; a bell rang—one sharp penetrating stroke; and then a footstep sounded along the gallery without, and next instant the attendant appeared. Nell saw him with dismay, fearing that, after all, he was but come to show her out; and that her rich bracelet had been sacrificed for nothing.

"Well?"

"The lady waits!" said the youth, lifting his great tired looking eyes to her masked face.

Nell rose, and the boy immediately turned and led the way behind the black curtain, along a narrow, dark passage, descending very gradually, but constantly, till the girl supposed, calculated she must have reached almost the basement of the house, though without counting a staircase. At the furthest end of this passage was a similar curtain to that in the room at the top of the building, and pausing for this, the youth laid his pale hand aside and entered, and then he turned back his pale hand aside and entered, and then he turned back his pale hand aside and entered, and then he turned back word—swear the oath, and I will introduce you as one of us."

"The Earl of Castelfort!" Claude said in astonishment.

NEW YORK CLIPPER.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1866.

To Correspondents.

ELEEKER AND GREEN.—The first steam-propelled vessel that crossed the Atlantic was American built and called the "Savannah." She was 380 tons burthen and sailed first to Savannah from New York—thence directly to Liverpool, where she arrived in eighteen days, seven of which she used steam, in July, 1819. Subsequently two ocean steamers left, the one from Cork, Ireland, April 4, 1838, the other from Bristol, Eng., April 6, same year, for New York—these were the "Sirius" and "Great Western," both of which arrived at New York on the 23d of the same month. The earliest English steamer sailed for India, August 16, 1825.

NORTH WEST.—A missed fly catch is recorded when the ball "touches" the hands or hand of the fielder and he fails to hold it on the fly. A "muffed" catch is when the ball falls directly into the hands of the fielder and he fails to hold it. In the one case the ball, if held, would have been a splendid catch perhaps, the very effort to get at it showing good fielding and yet it may nevertheless be a miss-catch, the rule necessarily being an arbitrary one.

R. L. W., New Bedford, Mass.—1. There was no cause for querrulous discussion. It was easy to determine correctly whether the ball was out or not; consequently the game keeper's right decision was the one to be adopted, whether his first or last. 2. Lady Fulton and Trustee have both trotted 20 miles within an hour in harness. 3. Mace and Goss have not fought for as much as £1,000 in stakes.

DICK DORNEY.—In the game of casino there are but 11 points, viz., big casino, 2; little casino, 1; spades, 1; cards, 3; aces, 1 each, 4; total, 11; this might be increased a few points by "sweeps," but the game could not be "twenty-one." Do you not refer to "vingt-un?" If you have been playing two deals for a game, and you tie as you state, it is a stand off, and the game must be played over.

J. W., Milwaukee.—1. James Collier was the lady's first husband. 2. They are not married. 3. She is the daughter of Junius Brutus Booth, Jr. 4. He is a good tenor singer but not equal to the gentleman you name. 5. Bernard is the best interlocutor in the nig business. 6. Hi. is tiving at Hudson, N. Y. 7. Alice is not married. 8. Sara lived with him in England, but at present is with her relatives down East. 9. Billy Birch.

VALLEY FALLS, R. I.—1. There is no champion, as far as the belt is concerned, and the Irish Giant is as much entitled to be so designated as any other man. The English sporting press perhaps will not admit it, but if O'B. wasn't a Hibernian it would make all the difference in the world. 2. Tom King fought and beat Jem Mace for the championship, but retired soon afterwards.

BRUNER.—1. The remains of Bill Poole and Tom Hyer were deposited in Greenwood. 2. No monuments mark the spot of either one. 3. The Menken's lithographs can't be obtained. Our Jim's got all in the market. 4. The Scotia has made the quickest time. 5. John is around the city somewhere.

HOOSIER, Indianapolis.—1. You will see by last week's CLIPPER that we have anticipated your first question. 2. You had bétter have it played first before you give it to an agent. Being unknown to the profession you would experience considerable trouble in getting it played here.

OLD SOLDIER, Havre de Grace.—1. 2:19¾. 2. No. 3. It is a matter of opinion. 4. There is no champion—McCoole and Davis fought for it, but Michael resigned after he'd won. 3. 2:19¾, but with a running mate and in a double team match. 6. We have no objection.

SUBSCRIBER.—1. Burton left the Chambers Street Theatre at the close of the season of 1855-6. He then went to the Metropolitan Theatre, now the Winter Garden. He afterwards played an engagement at Niblo's Garden and in other cities. He died in this city Feb. 10, 1860.

PLEBIAN, St. Catharines, C. W.—1. Send $6 and we will send you "them pictures"—this does not include expressage. 2. If you cannot get our paper from the newsdealders, you had better subscribe for it direct.

LIGHTING UP.—It is stated that 2,500 of the English clergy now use lights in their churches, after the fashion of Rome. Probably these congregations were in need of more light.

SAMPLERS.—In Philadelphia, Peter McGucken has been appointed inspector of the whisky, and Joseph Severns Surveyor of the Port.

GONE TO GRASS.—Many Virginia planters are turning their attention to grazing, on account of the unreliability of labor.

IS IT TRUE.—The cable informs us that the Pope is to be driven out of Italy, which "our Jim" pronounces It a lie.

IN A BAD FIX.—An illiterate politician, recently appointed assessor of revenue in Philadelphia, was deputed to take the census of his district. The job was completed, but the report was subsequently mislaid, upon which the assessor wrote to the collector as follows:—

The collector replied that he never retained a man in his employ after he had lost his senses—so the senseless man was discharged.

THE PROJECTED OCEAN RACE.—It is now generally conceded that, in the projected yacht race from New York to Cowes, the owners of the yachts should go therein. Some other yachts than the three named for the race are seeking entrance, but we hope the discussion on the point is not brought about in order to delay the match and perhaps upset it altogether. We have our fears, now that the public have decided in favor of the owners sailing in their vessels, that something will occur by which the match will go "off" instead of the yachts.

JACK OF ALL TRADES, ETC.—Smythe, with a y, who splurges at the Cooper Institute on the Sabbath day, and paints the glories of the "Black Crook" and other sensations in the most glowing terms, is said to have formerly been a printer, then a reporter, next a quack medicine peddlar, afterwards an actor and now a poor preacher. When once a man begins to go down how rapid is his fall.

"OUT DOOR SPORTS FOR BOYS."—This is the title of a neat little volume just published by Dick & Fitzgerald. It gives instructions in very many games adapted to youths, copiously illustrated, and is just the book for a holiday present. "Martine's Etiquette," which tells you how to behave, what to do in company and how to do it, is another recent publication by this firm.

SHUT PAN ON HIM.—Smythe, who was to have repeated his "Black Crook Readings" last Sunday, found himself out in the cold, the directors of the Cooper Institute refusing to allow him the use of the lecture room. A "large and fashionable audience" were thus doomed to disappointment. Where will Smythe turn up next? We shall keep an eye on Smythe.

THANKSGIVING.—Thursday, November 29th, having been appointed as a day of national thanksgiving, the day will be observed in this city in the usual way; that is, by eating and drinking and carousing in the most free and easy manner. But little attention will be paid to thanksgiving.

A BAD THING.—A man in New York some time ago broke one of his legs by falling over a lamp post on the pavement. In a suit against the city he has just recovered $3,000. This is a bad precedent—every Tom, Dick and Harry who tumbles against a lamp post will be for bringing action against the city.

ON THE TRAMP.—Theodore Tilton has commenced "swinging around the circle" on his annual lecturing campaign, haranguing the multitude on "Reconstruction" and other exciting subjects. Would not the proper title for Tilton's lectures be "Tilton Whoops?"

GOT SKINNED.—During the financial excitement last week a prominent tanner went by the board. His creditors promise to tan his hide for him, which is very kind in the creditors, from whom the tanner is hiding.

AGITATE.—The Impartial Suffrage League, the Colored Men's League, and the Union League are advised to unite. Is it for the purpose of securing League-al rights for the colored or the white man?

OUR FOLKS.—Two-thirds of the elaborately gotten up New York editors live in Brooklyn, it is reported. The other third dye in New York.

A PEARL OF GREAT PRICE.—A few days since, we are told, while a man was "going through" a can of oysters, he found a veritable pearl of the value of fifty dollars. Can this be true?

BLACKBERRIES.—In the marriage notices of the daily papers on the 20th ult., we saw one signifying that Mr. Black had been joined in wedlock to Miss Berry. Wonder if they calculate to raise a large crop of blackberries?

BIG JUMP.—Ed. Jump, the noted California caricaturist, has jumped from Montgomery Block, San Francisco, to the Boulevards of the Empire City, and is at present engaged on a bust of William Birch, Esq.

THE LAST MAN.—Samuel Dunn, of New York, is said to be the last living revolutionary pensioner. Even his pension will soon be done.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.—We are told that the ladies of Brazil, on being introduced to a stranger, insist on being embraced. This is strange, but the result is sometimes a little stranger.

THE ORIENTAL BASE BALL CLUB, of Brooklyn, E. D., hold their first annual ball at Union Hall on December 27th. We thankfully acknowledge an invitation to be present.

BUSY.—They say that the life insurance companies of Chicago, Memphis, and other cities thereaway, are doing a lively business. Is this an evidence of general prosperity or a reign of terror?

SOMETHING FROM THE DEVIL.—Spurgeon thinks that "Ritualism comes directly from the devil." If Spurgeon is right you'll bear this fact in mind.

BALL PLAY.

THE NEXT CONVENTION.

The annual meeting of the National Association, which is to be held at Clinton Hall on Wednesday, December 12th, will probably be the most numerously attended and influential assemblage of the fraternity ever known in the annals of the game. Over two hundred clubs will be represented, of which over one hundred and twenty will be from New York State, and some thirty odd from States north and east of New York, while from States south and west of New York the promise is that about a hundred odd will be represented. We understand that a meeting of New York and Brooklyn clubs is to be held at the Gotham Cottage, 298 Bowery, this next week, to make arrangements for the hospitable reception of the delegates from the out of town clubs. Delegates from the following clubs will comprise the Committee of Arrangements:—

From New York—The Active, Eagle, Empire, Eclectic, Fulton Market, Gotham, Jefferson, Knickerbocker, Mutual, M. M. Van Dyke, Mystic, New York, Social and Union clubs. From Brooklyn—The Atlantic, Contest, Clinton, Constellation, Eckford, Enterprise, Excelsior, Greenwood, Independent, Mohawk, Oriental, Powhattan, Peconic, Resolute, Star and Williamsburgh. Besides the above, delegates should be sent from the New York and Brooklyn clubs who will enter the convention this year, as every local club is concerned in supporting the good name of the metropolis and its vicinity for hospitable treatment of strangers. This list would include the Sparta, Endeavor, Harlem and Hope clubs, of New York, and the Intrepid and Dictator clubs, of Brooklyn, making a total of thirty-six clubs among which to divide the expenses of an entertainment such as is suggested for the occasion. The assessment should be made in proportion to the well known reputation of each club for pecuniary means, besides which there are plenty of wealthy members of the fraternity who would readily contribute to the occasion.

The delegates to the convention will assemble at Clinton Hall, Astor Place, near Broadway and Eighth street, at 2½ P. M., on Wednesday, December 12th. At 3 P. M. President Wildey will call the convention to order. None but delegates will take seats. When all the delegates have been seated, then visitors will take remaining seats. The order of business of the convention is as follows:—Roll call; reading of minutes; reports of officers; balloting for new members; collection of fees; reports of committees, first, on nominations, then, on rules, then, printing and judiciary; unfinished business; election of officers and new business.

The rules of the convention prohibit any member from discussing any question under debate without rising and addressing the chair. Also, any member from speaking more than twice on any one question, and not more than five minutes at any time, except by unanimous consent.

The rules also require every member to vote on all questions, unless directly or personally interested, or excused by a majority of those present.

Any member may, at any time, call for the reading of the laws or of the minutes of any meeting.

The yeas and nays must be taken on any question, if five or more members call for it.

In relation to charges against individual members or clubs, delegates will do well to bear in mind that nothing of the kind can be entertained or discussed by the convention unless it comes up for action before them through the medium of the judiciary committee, or in the form of an amendment to the rules through the committee of rules. The judiciary committee are alone charged with the investigation of charges of the kind which have been so prevalent, and unless the subject has been legally presented to their notice it cannot come before the convention. Many suppose that any grievance they may have to be disposed of at the bar of a Court of Equity will justify them in bringing the complaint before the convention, but in this they are mistaken. To take one case for instance. One club plays another club a match and loses, and afterwards, ascertaining that certain players in the winning nine received pay for playing, thereby rendering the game "null and void," they determine upon bringing the matter before the convention. Instead of laying their charges before the judiciary committee within the ten days' time required, they postpone action until the meeting of the convention, in the hope of bringing the subject to light before the whole convention. By this course they fail entirely, as no complaint of the kind can be received by the convention except through the committee appointed for this very purpose. Were it otherwise, the convention would soon be turned into a debating society, and little else would have to be done except to attend to the angry discussions of quarrelsome parties. To avoid this the judiciary committee was organized, and, by the way, we trust that this year the president will form his committees in such way that they will be able to meet together. Three members of the present judiciary committee reside out of town hundreds of miles apart, and the same is the case with members of the other committees.

An interesting matter as regards the coming Convention, is that as to whom is to be the next president. The most prominent candidate, we learn, is Mr. A. P. Gorman, the popular president of the National Club, of Washington. We know of no member of the fraternity among the delegates who in every respect is more worthy the honor, or more competent to fill the duties of the position than Mr. Gorman. Well acquainted with the rules of the game practically and theoretically, and, moreover, thoroughly conversant with the duties of a presiding officer, essentially so from his long association with the United States Senate, it seems to us that he is the man above all others for the next president of the convention. However, that is a matter the delegates alone will settle among themselves without any outside interference. New York has had five presidents in the convention, Brooklyn one, Philadelphia one and Newark one. One reason in favor of the election of a president from among the Southern clubs is, that it would be proper in view of the existing position of affairs in the country that the fraternity should prove to the world that sectionalism is unknown in our national game, and in view of the fact that for the first time in the history of the game clubs from the South will enter the convention, the election of the president of the "Champion club of the South" would go far to prove the absence of any narrow sectional ideas in the National Association. However, there are others, no doubt, well worthy the position, and if it is not deemed advisable to make such a selection, it will be Brooklyn's turn to send a president to the convention. We think, however, a large majority will be found to favor the nominee suggested.

SAM COLLYER AND JOHNNY McGLADE
MATCHED FOR ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS A SIDE, AND THE
LIGHT WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP OF AMERICA,
AT 128lb., ON TUESDAY, JAN. 15.

After much discussion, doubts and fears, we are now enabled to state by the card that the above named worthies are matched in earnest. Some seven weeks ago a challenge was given out on behalf of Johnny McGlade, at his benefit at Kit Burns' canine amphitheatre in Water street, which "passed" for a time, and would have passed longer had not the gallant young Sam Collyer stepped forth from his retirement and apprised us that he would make the match for $2,000, to fight in four weeks' time from signing the articles of war. This was rather unexpected to Mac and the sports generally, but there was no getting behind it, and it was thought a settlement would have been arrived at before election, as Johnny expected to be able to post a "century" one month after his challenge, but politics engrossed everybody's attention just then, and he couldn't make things meet, much to his disappointment. Collyer was notified, so as to save him a journey for nix, and things passed on until Nov. 12, when "that Sam" showed in propria personæ, and on the next day, the 13th, met McGlade at our office by appointment, but was again doomed to disappointment, as that day, being election day, made it next to impossible to come to any arrangement with McGlade's party, who were too busy electioneering for the political ring to bother about pugilistic ring matters. Johnny naturally felt bad over it, but couldn't help matters, and, after tarrying five or six days in Gotham, Collyer returned home under the impression that the prospect of a match was too dubious to warrant any more trips east until he was satisfied that something more solid than words was forthcoming. At last, by constant running about from this backer to that, McGlade, to his joy, found a man willing to stake the necessary "equiv." to induce Collyer to take another trip to the Empire City, and accordingly the sum of $100 was deposited in our care on the 18th of last month, appointing Friday, Nov. 23, as a day of meeting to draw up and sign the usual documents.

Friday brought with it from Baltimore the Light Weight Champion, bright and early, with a friend, and about noon the other delegates arrived, McGlade accompanied by the redoubtable Kit, Sam Davis, Dan Kerrigan, Bill Jenkins, Joe Coburn and three or four other notabilities, Collyer, as before, with one bower, his right one. A little facetiæ was indulged in, as is always the case when Handsome Kit is around, but they finally settled down to business. Collyer was anxious to have the fight come off in some State where there were no laws against it, no imprisonment, no fines, no after clap, and where both men could make something out of the trip by sharing the proceeds of the excursion boats—he was also willing to bind himself so that in case of any interference by his friends McGlade should receive the whole of the stakemoney, and furthermore agreed to pay the expenses of Johnny and two friends both ways and while they stayed in the vicinity. All these inducements failed in their effect, although McGlade personally appeared willing to agree to almost anything, and after a little more pow-pow, Collyer agreed to bind himself strictly to the letter of the law, as contained below, and in earnest thereof he in like manner left $100 with us, making $100 from each now in our hands. The articles will give all necessary information:—

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT entered into this twenty-third day of November, 1866, between Samuel Collyer and John McGlade. The said Samuel Collyer agrees to fight the said John McGlade, a fair stand up fight, according to the New Rules of the Pugilistic Benevolent Association, by which the said Samuel Collyer and John McGlade hereby mutually agree to be bound. The said fight shall be for the sum of one thousand dollars a side, open for as much more as may be hereafter mutually agreed upon, and shall take place on Tuesday, the fifteenth day of January, 1867, half way between New York city and Baltimore. The men to be confined to 128lb. and to weigh the morning of the fight, and neither shall exceeding 128lb in weight, to forfeit the money deposited. In pursuance of this agreement, the sum of one hundred dollars a side is herewith deposited in the hands of Frank Queen. The remaining deposits of one hundred dollars a side to be posted on every successive Saturday, commencing with December 1st, and the whole amount to be at the CLIPPER office (as also the previous deposits,) by Saturday, January 12, 1867, when the men shall either be present in person or have a representative present at the CLIPPER office to agree upon a final stakeholder. The men, or their representative, shall meet at the CLIPPER office on Saturday, December 29, to appoint one man from each side, and they shall select a third party, whose duty it shall be to pick out the place of fighting. Either man to have the deposit in the hands of the Editor of the NEW YORK CLIPPER by the times above specified, or the party failing to forfeit the money deposited. The men shall be in the ring between the hours of 6 A. M. and 12 o'clock M., or the man absent to forfeit the battle money. That in the event of magisterial interference, the referee, if appointed—if not, the stakeholder shall name the next time and place of fighting, within the week ending January 19, 1867. That the expenses of the ropes and stakes shall be borne mutually, share and share alike. The decision of the referee to be final and binding, no matter what his verdict may be.

ED JAMES. SAM COLLYER.
M. HENRY.

A QUICK MILL.—Jim Sullivan, of the Sixth Ward, and Dan Kelly, of Brooklyn, accompanied by their seconds—Dick Hollinwood and Dick Dooney for the former, and Mike Noonan and Young Duane for Kelly—together with a few chosen friends, adjourned to Mott Haven on Evacuation Day, for the purpose of commemorating the occasion by a game of fisticuffs. The affair was brought off without interference of any kind, eighty rounds being contested in one hour and twenty-three minutes, when the sponge was elevated in token of Jim's triumph. Both men were severely punished, Kelly being perfectly blind on coming up for the 70th round. Alf. Walker was referee. The press upon our columns obliges us to defer an extended account of this game mill until our next issue.

LIVELY TIME UP IN PORTLAND.—A certain saloon in the home of Young Walter, the oarsman, not far from the depot, was the scene of a lively turn up a few days ago, between Johnny McCluskey and Peter Daley, who fought Johnny Lazarus and Young Siddons. They had a growl over something or other, and from words came to blows, Johnny being aided by his fighting dog, so that Peter had his hands full with one and the other, until outside parties interfered, and the "controversy" ended. It is thought that a match may yet grow out of it, as neither party is satisfied with their last scrimmage.

OWEN GEOGHEGHAN FOR COUNCILMAN.—On the 24th of November, the above mentioned sporting publican was unanimously nominated for the office of Councilman in the district comprising the 18th, 20th and 21st Wards, by the Tammany section of the Democracy. Owen has proved himself a useful man for the party, and this is done in appreciation of past services.

SEE HERE!—Theo. Allen has received the Aldermanic nomination for the Fifth District, and, it is said, has a good show to win. The sports are taking advantage of the election of Morrissey to Congress, aint they!

TESTIMONIAL TO SAM COLLYER.—The esteemed little Baltimorean, at present matched with Johnny McGlade, for $2000, and the Light Weight Championship, whose victories over Carr, Bolster and young Barney Aaron, all in the current year, have raised his name to the topmost niche of pugilistic fame, will shortly be the recipient of a complimentary sparring entertainment in this city or Brooklyn, if a suitable hall can be procured. The mere mention of this fact will fill any place he may be able to get. Full particulars in our next.

JOHNNY WALKER, it appears, was the boxer whose death we were called upon to chronicle a short time ago, the same promising young gladiator who fought Billy Dwyer, some three hours in '63, in California.

MIKE MCFARLAND, of dog and cock fighting celebrity, died in San Francisco, Cal., on the 18th of October. Michael was also known as a trainer.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.—Agents are wanted to sell those wonderfully executed lithographs, "Going to and Coming from the Fight," described at length in our last issue. We know of no sporting prints which ought to sell better than these, and an enterprising, smart agent could do right well with them. For other information see an advertisement elsewhere.

THE GREAT CANINE MEDICO.—Sam Turner, M.D., of 52 Portland street, Boston, may be consulted on all kinds of infectious diseases which man's most faithful friend—the dog—is heir to, and with implicit confidence as to his ability. Samuel has also all kinds of canines for sale. Call and see Sam.

REPORTED DEAD.—A rumor is current that Hen Winkle, the pugilist, died in this city last week, of consumption, but the report needs confirmation. We hope it may prove not so.

ARRIVED OUT.—Dooney Harris arrived in San Francisco by the steamship Golden City, from Panama, on Nov. 24, and is stopping at the Hotel de Dominick.

HO! FOR SPRINGFIELD.—Bob Corcoran, Jack Turner and Butt Riley, three well tried and sturdy gladiators, purpose making a visit to ye ancient City of ye Armorie some time next week, there to give a gymnastic and scientific exhibition, as Springfield is where Corcoran was raised, and he takes two of the best men with him in the market. Day and date in our next.

OPEN TO RUN.—W. E. Harding, who recently defeated Ike Rooney, is open to run any man in the world a three mile race, the terms of which are to be made known on the acceptance of the challenge.

DAN TIERNEY DEFENDED.—An old Baltimorean subscriber writes us to correct a statement in the CLIPPER, which you would like to correct a statement in the CLIPPER, wherein you state the murderer, Dan Tierney, is well known by the cognomen of the New York Fighter, and has lived in Baltimore only about two months. Such is not the case. Tierney was born and raised in Baltimore, and was never known as a fighter amongst any of his acquaintances. On the other hand, Nelson, the murdered man, is a New Yorker, has only resided amongst us for five or six months, and was known, I believe, as the New York Fighter."

TOUCH IN A QUANDARY.—It is not often that Uncle Bill gets caught napping, but we have a case in hand which puzzles the old gentleman's head considerably. It seems that some friend of William's left a set of gloves for him to clean without leaving his name, and he is very anxious for the owner to make himself known, which he can do by dropping a line in our care, giving his address. Let the unknown speak out.

THE FORTHCOMING TEST OF SKILL BETWEEN MCDEVITT AND GOLDTHWAIT.

At present, the most important billiard engagement sur le tapis is that between John McDevitt, a young and rising player of this city, and William Goldthwait, of Boston, an expert of much greater experience. The match is creating more than ordinary interest—it has, in fact, become town-talk and the topic of billiard circles out of town. The admissions, we are informed, have been limited to eight hundred, which number is about all the hall, as the players purpose having it arranged, will comfortably seat. Of the eight hundred tickets, one-fourth are reserved, while of the remainder only four hundred will be sold. The match is the second of a series entered into at the time of holding the State Champions' Tournament, and it is to be played at Irving Hall on Friday evening of the current week. A month ago, at Bumstead Hall, Boston, the first game—caroms, 1500 points up, for $1000—was played, the New York representative winning. To that game the present one is indebted for the attention it is attracting, which attention is chiefly fixed upon McDevitt, he having made in the course of the contest the unexampled run of 409 points, and an average, in 1500 points, of 25 and upwards.

OLLA PODRIDA.

This week will witness unusual activity in metropolitan billiard circles. Last night, Messrs. Phelan, Carme, McDevitt, Cahill and others, gave an exhibition at the Tontine Billiard Room, corner of Howard street and Broadway. To-night, (Tuesday), if the necessary changes have been made in the billiard room, which they have promised to visit, they will play in Newark, N. J. On Wednesday night, they will reopen the Eclectic Billiard Room, 176 Third avenue, which has been renovated, and is now owned by Mr. G. S. Wilkins, a Boston gentleman. Daniels and Goldthwait also will probably assist. Thursday, there is to be a bonus [illegible] precisely where, we have forgotten. On Friday night, the great match between McDevitt and Goldthwait takes place at Irving Hall, and on Saturday night the week will be appropriately wound up with cue-ceremonials at McDevitt's, Carme's and O'Connor's.....Edmund H. Nelms, after waiting some time for Goldthwait, has sought another match. He has obeyed the scriptural command, "and gone the way of all flesh." Let no one bewail his death, for he is not dead—he is only married. According to our exchanges, he has been in this condition some two weeks. It is a stale platitude, this wishing a newly wedded couple joy. The musty old maid utters it, the crusty old bachelor echoes it, yet neither means it. So we shall be original and heartfelt, and adopting the vein of the martial, give Nelms and his fair spouse our blessing:—

"Perpetual harmony their life attend,
And Venus still the well matched pair befriend!
May she when Time has sunk him into years,
Love her old man and cherish his white hairs;
Nor he perceive her charms through age decay,
But think each happy sun his bridal day!"

.....Louis Fox, at last accounts, was recovering slowly from his bullet-wound. Thanks to the care he has received, he may be pronounced out of danger.....Joseph Dion declines to accept forfeit from Fox, and also declines to play McDevitt in his stead. With the concurrence of those who may have an interest in seeing that the rule as to time is enforced, he proposes to give Mr. Fox until the 9th of May to recover. If he defeats Fox on or before that date, he proposes to play McDevitt, who is next in order, about the 23d of May.....At Chester, Pa., last week, a new room, containing four P. & C. tables, was opened with much blowing of trumpets and sounding of gongs—in other words, good players from Philadelphia swung the cue.....There is a rumor on the street that Dudley Kavanagh intends to challenge Joseph Dion to play for $10,000. If a challenge to this effect be issued, it will be framed in such a way that Dion will have to abandon his publicly expressed resolve and go out of the ordinary channel to accept it. During the past year Kavanagh has had a chance to play three men—Dion, Carme and McDevitt—for $10,000, and declined to do it. There is one way that a match can be brought about, however. Let Kavanagh challenge Dion for the American championship and a round stake of $20,000. Dion, who can command the purse of Fortunatus, will not refuse to raise the stake to this vast figure; and, in order that so important a match might come at once to an issue, we have no doubt that, with the concurrence of Dion himself, Fox and McDevitt would step aside to make room for Kavanagh. The suggestion is a good one, and, if playing billiards is meant, should be acted upon.....Another rumor is that Kavanagh proposed, to a friend of Dion's to bet $10,000, still in gold, that the Canadian player can disconnect McDevitt at the four ball game, pushing shots interdicted. Money, it will be inferred, is plenty .....Another match at the French game, between the amateurs, whose recent previous battles by cues have been reported in the two last numbers of the CLIPPER, was played at the rooms of Christopher Columbus O'Connor, Union Square, on Thursday night last. The game, 150 up, was very close, and won by a point only. It was also extremely well played. The loser, who wagered $800 against $1,000, was in reality the winner, but he neglected to see that his tallies were correctly marked up, and so lost a point and the match. At the request of the contestants, their names are withheld. To adopt an Irishism, sporting journals copying this will please omit the names.....A tournament for the Championship of Harlem was begun on Wednesday night last, at King's rooms, in that village. Carme and Phelan played an exhibition game of 300 points as an interlude. Harlem, divested of lager-loving Gothamites, is a very quiet and goodly place at this season of the year. There are some very fair billiard players there, but no excitement. The tournament still continues.....John McDevitt proposes to give two handsome prizes, to first a gold watch, to the two best players at his rooms. The six players who shall make the highest runs between December 1st and January 1st are to play a series of games, to suit themselves, for the prizes. Of course, none but regular patrons of the house can compete. Outsiders, especially lunch-eaters and others who, though they themselves never say "turkey," invariably take a forty cent segar when invited to take something within reason, are respectfully and gently notified that they "can't come in."..... The Philadelphia City Item is publishing sketches of leading players. Having got through with Victor Estephe, (who, by the way, was in town last week), it announced that its next subject would be Christian Bird, whose life, where he to write it, would be told in monosyllables. And here comes in a good thing on the reporter. Not having the natural hand for a "true history," he went to Bird, as the story runs, for some points. "I have been thirty years a billiard player, and that is all I have to say," was the somewhat inexpressive and yet pithy rejoinder of Bird, who, above all things, hates to be button-holed.....John T. Ford, the theatrical manager, contemplates opening a room in Baltimore, with ten tables.....Melvin Foster has gone to Newark, to take charge of a large room there.....Henry McVittie, of Montreal, is to have another room in that city. There will be six tables in it. .....Palace Hall, one of the finest rooms in Chicago, or at the West for the matter of that, has been purchased by Thomas Foley, champion of Illinois, who intends to take out the old tables and put in seven of the "Standard American."..... L. Smith Kann is trying to get up a tournament for the amateur championship of his rooms, Nos. 127 and 129 Baltimore street, Baltimore, Md.—E. J. Plunkett is the superintendent of this house.....Owing to the illness of two of the contestants, likewise of Philip Tieman, and the inability of either Phelan, McDevitt, Carme or Dion to attend, the Kentucky tournament has been postponed. It will take place either about the middle of December, or early in January.....The tax on billiard tables in Montreal has been reduced, as one effect of the October contest for the American championship, which called the attention of Canadian legislators and the Canadian public at large, to the advantages of billiards as an intellectual pastime. Formerly, the tax was $150 on the first table, $100 on the second, and $50 on every subsequent one. Now it is $100 on the first, $50 on the second, and $20 on each succeeding table.

NAUGHTY THINGS THAT A PREACHER SAW.

Smith's Experience at Niblo's.

A short time since brother Charles Smith, of pious persuasion, resolved to visit the theatre for the purpose of seeing the "Black Crook," and judging of its merits for himself. He went, he saw, and in a sermon preached before a large, mixed and appreciative congregation at the Cooper Institute, on the 18th November. Here is what the good man said in reference to the show:—

"We take a seat in the dress circle, near the stage, or one in the circle of the parquet, from each of which we can hear and see sufficiently well. The first thing that strikes the eye is the immodest dress of the girls; the short skirts and undergarments of thin gauze-like material, allowing the form of the figure to be discernible through it in some instances; the flesh colored tights, imitating nature so well that the illusion is complete; with the exceedingly short drawers, almost tight fitting, extending very little below the hip, also of thin material; arms and neck apparently bare, and bodice so cut and fitted as to show off every inch and outline of the body above the waist. The attitudes were exceedingly indelicate—ladies dancing so as to make their undergarments spring up, exposing the figure beneath from the waist to the toe, except for such covering as we have described; stretching out a foot so as to place the limb in a horizontal line drawn from the hip, and turning the foot thus held out towards the audience; sometimes, in addition to the elevation of the stage floor, standing on a pedestal about two feet, more or less, in height. At other times, when a danseuse is assisted by a danseur, the attitudes assumed by both in conjunction suggest to the imagination scenes which one may read of in descriptions of ancient heathen orgies. Even in parts of the pantomimic representations the dress and attitudes are indelicate and voluptuous. Objectionable, however, as all that may be, there are portions of the dramatical performance which, to say the least, are not less objectionable; as, for example, the dialogue between the madam and her suitor, where he requests her to retire with him to a room which he has provided in the castle, and she, accompanying her answer with sly, sidelong glances, says, "Dare I trust myself with you? We women are such weak, silly creatures! You men are such naughty, naughty creatures!" Then follows a scene which for indecency beggars description, in which she falls into his arms, he makes an impression upon her cheek, and then with his arm round her, retires from the stage (like one who had captivated a prize), as if to said room provided. Later in the evening the same pair appear again on the stage, still unmarried, enacting another vulgar scene. Towards the end they appear again, the performance having so far left a marriage between them, to be inferred if you please, yet they discourse to each other with a familiarity and coarseness that would be unbecoming to a married couple. Then, in a dialogue about snoring, bedclothes, self-defence, nightmare, separate apartments, sleeping alone in future, &c., he addresses her in a double entendre, which is so doubly refined in a subterranean crucible that respect for the polite ears of my audience utterly forbids me to quote the language. Double entendre is double distilled iniquity of the most subtle nature—such that it ought to be shunned as one would shun the most delicate, yet deadly poison. Any person who has witnessed the thing may comprehend the matter by recalling the remainder of the sentence, commencing, "You are an underlayer of mustard." Is not that exhibition, my hearers, appropriately styled "the naked truth?" Truth is a good thing, and it may be even true that nature unadorned is adorned the most; but the legal profession have a maxim, which if ever true at all, is true with regard to the subjects of those scenes, that "the truth is not to be told at all times." A public theatre with a promiscuous crowd, is surely not a place to display the naked truth of person, limb and voluptuous dialogue. Can any terms be employed too strong in which to denounce such performances? Model artists they are, poor things; and pity 'tis, 'tis true. But the infernal fiend himself is the greatest model artist of all creatures, and it is not by any means out of keeping with this performance that his representative figures and plays in every part. It may be said—Is it not splendid? Is not the last scene glorious? Granted, what then? Is it not so much the worse? The greater the ability, the greater the responsibility. Satan himself appears as an angel of light. Is he the less vile? The greater his power, by so much the more is the potency for evil great. That scene in itself is a splendid nothing. It imitates no reality in heaven, earth or hell. It merely exhibits "the naked truth" of poor silly humanity in its most voluptuous appearances and attitudes made to look more attractive. Is poison in its primitive state to be shunned? Is it to be eschewed any less when it is coated with sugar, or wrapped in leaf of silver or gold? No, sir; the very attractiveness of its decorated exterior makes it only the more dangerous. Adorned, it may be mistaken for nutritious aliment—for silver, or even for gold—and only when too late may the poor dupe whom it has deceived find out that he is undone. But without the adornment, who would be so likely to destroy himself thereby? And so, the most barefaced and avowedly obscene exhibitions in the lowest dens of infamy are exceeded in enormity by this splendid farce upon human nature. How does it stand in the light of the principle presented in the text? Can any one who goes there for pleasure say that he finds such pleasure as he may enjoy within the limits of Christian liberty, without stretching that liberty into licentiousness, like a web of elastic, till, torn into shreds, its Christianity is destroyed, and nothing is left but the rags of ill-used virtue? There was nothing to commend it from beginning to end. To say the least, "it is a queer thing."

Not only an iniquity but a uniquity, with no plot, no good moral implied—no—no—no—anything that is good—a naughty, naughty, naughty thing throughout. It is a very sacrifice to the devil. Let it be denounced in press, pulpit, parlor and boudoir, until those who are responsible for it shall be constrained by a refined public sentiment to substitute for it something that will improve rather than injure the public morals of this splendid metropolis (applause), something that will not stoop to enter into competition with the lowest purlieus in order to satisfy the lascivious eye with sights of beauty. (Applause.) It speaks well for our nation, for the native modesty of American ladies, and the instinctive virtuous tastes of American artistes, that the proprietors and managers of this concern could find none upon this continent sunk so low in self respect as to put in jeopardy their all of character and weal; and, therefore, to procure their ballet troupe, found it necessary to bring them from beyond the seas (applause), as in former times the Africans were imported, and then made to sing their own shame.

SEEING JOHN.

Since the election of John Morrissey to represent the metropolis in Congress, nearly every writer of the press has had something to say concerning the Congressional man of muscle. The correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial has seen John, and this is what he has to say of the great ex-pounder:—

"I had the great pleasure of seeing one of New York's distinguished representatives—John Morrissey—the other day, in one of the reading rooms of the Astor House. I had seen him some years ago, when he was traveling on his muscle—when he wore short, croppy hair, and had two fists like two battering rams. In the Democratic Congressman of to-day I tried to recognize the pugilist of ten years since, but I couldn't—nor could I detect even the poker player of yesterday. John looks quite respectable for a New York politician. As between him and Fernando Wood, if I had to walk arm in arm with both, and rely solely upon my knowledge of physiognomy as an index of character, I should unhesitatingly carry my pocket book on the Morrissey side of my pantaloons. Of course John doesn't look like a gentleman, except upon the modern theory that every male person of 21 years and upward, who doesn't perform some outrageously indecent act, is a gentleman, or upon the principle adopted by hotel clerks in the disposition of rooms, that whoever wears broadcloath is ipse facto an eminently respectable individual and entitled to the first floor front. His features are anything but classical, and you can tell at a glance that he hasn't hurt the sight of those large, dull-looking, but withal kindly and sympathetic eyes of his (they were peepers a few years ago) in studying Homer by lamp-light. But there is nothing positively bad or brutal looking about him, and his manners and deportment are far from what must be most persons' ideal of the ways and means of a whilom pugilist. He is a little above the medium height, rather stoutly built, always neatly, but never gaudily dressed, and will readily pass in a crowd for a decent sort of person, especially if it be known that he came from New York. There are two features about him by which he can be recognized by those who have heard of him but have never seen him. One is artificial and the other natural. He is never known to be without an immense diamond pin, said to be worth $20,000, in his shirt, and he wears about the longest and straightest black hair I have ever seen on any man. The pin shines out from his bosom in the dark alleys of the 'bloody sixth' like a calcium light, and is really about the only light ever seen by many of his constituents. And, by the way, it wouldn't be safe for anybody but John Morrissey to wear so valuable an ornament after nightfall among his constituents.

John's long black hair and heavy black whiskers and moustache, the former covering the back of a rather bullish neck and the latter concealing a mouth quite ungenteel in its proportions, serve the double purpose of hiding defects and presenting positive attractions; for they make him what the ladies would call a good looking man. He is a handsomer man than the President, and it would not surprise me at all to learn within a year that he has supplanted the humble individual in the esteem of Mrs. Cobb. Let Andrew be warned in time, and get a $20,000 pin and a bottle of hair dye.

I have said that Morrissey could be recognized by his hair and his diamond. I should have added a nasal peculiarity, the knowledge of which would aid materially in selecting him from a crowd. And, perhaps, it would enable one to pick him out, even from a crowd of black haired and diamond pinned men. It is the queerest nose I have seen in a long time—perhaps the queerest I have ever seen. It is not Roman, not Grecian, not pug, not aquiline, but appears to me rather like a subjugated pug, reconstructed on the Grecian principle. It is the smallest of all noses, and almost justifies the belief on the part of those who know John's history, that having been deprived of his own "proboscis" in a prize fight, he had him most recently punching up for his loss by supplying some young lady, who possessed a superfluity of her olfactory organ. Even if he did this, however, he spoiled the article in making the transfer, and hence the miserable nose he wears to-day. Morrissey has, of late days, forsworn gambling and betaken himself to a virtuous life in a palatial residence in Lexington avenue, with a fortune estimated at $2,000,000. He recently gave $7,000 as a donation to the church of Saint Somebody or other in this city, being moved to the generous deed, I believe, by the announcement that Senator Wilson had got religion. Desirous of going to heaven, he yet scorned Wilson's Yankee free grace road, and, with the liberality of a prince, he came forward and paid his way to the golden gates of Paradise.

BILLIARDS MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY DR. MARCY.

Nothing contributes more to the physical, moral, and intellectual development and healthfulness of a community than suitable recreation. Man is made up of a great variety of organs and faculties, all destined to perform certain functions, and a proper exercise and developement of them is essential to the highest degree of health and usefulness. This vital fact is not duly appreciated by the American people. In all parts of our country the chief end of life appears to consist in the acquisition of riches; and all the faculties of the mind, yea, even health itself, are rendered subservient to this object. In our large cities especially, violations of laws of health are almost universal. The amount of recreation and amusement indulged in by our professional, literary and business men is entirely inadequate to secure that degree of physical and mental vigor which properly belongs to them. Scarcely a man of them can examine carefully the mortal tabernacle in which his soul dwells without finding some derangement, some source of pain, depression of spirits, or other annoyance.

We claim that a large portion of these evils are due to excessive devotion to business, and to a neglect of those mental and physical diversions which conduce so materially to health and happiness. On returning home from business, our citizens indulge in rich dinners, with vinous and other potations; after the meal is ended, a majority of them mope over their evening journals, ponder upon the prices of merchandise, stocks and the profits and losses of the day, and then retire to an unrefreshing sleep, with a stomach full of rich viands and exciting stimulants, and a mind oppressed with perplexing cares and thoughts of business. Another portion pass a large part of the night at crowded parties, balls, clubs and late suppers, and call this recreation. But is the inhalation for hours in succession of a poisonous atmosphere, or an indulgence in game suppers, punches, wines, ices and other abominations at two or three o'clock in the morning, and then going from heated apartments with open pores into a cold atmosphere, in sober reality amusing or conducive to health or morals? Let the next morning's headache, nausea and mental and bodily lassitude, which even Seltzer water fails to remove, answer. Later, let the sallow skin, the dyspeptic stomach, the torpid liver, the shaky nerves, and the blue devils respond to the query. Later still, let apoplexy, paralysis, softening of the brain, or Bright's disease give the final answer.

What then can be suggested as suitable modes of recreation? How can we present that exercise and diversion to both mind and body which will result in recruiting them from the perplexing toils and cares of business? We answer, by directing the thoughts and the muscles into new and agreeable channels; by taking the mind from care, anxiety and severe application, and diverting it by pleasurable exercise and excitement; by setting aside disagreeable and depressing emotions, and substituting in their place those which are cheerful and exhilarating; by giving to the dormant muscles of the limbs and of the whole body that gentle and healthful exercise which they so much require, but of which they are deprived in the ordinary avocations of city life.

One of the modes by which these desirable objects may be accomplished is to introduce into private houses a billiard table, and to present it to the entire family—men, women and children—as a means of daily exercise and recreation. The most indolent and stupid will, by practice, soon acquire a fondness for the game; and the improvement in the sanitary condition of those who habitually indulge in it, will commend it in the strongest manner to the heads of families.

We also advocate the game of billiards in families from a moral as well as sanitary point of view. Young America is naturally "frisky," naturally enthusiastic, exuberant, and fond of excitement and fun. Confine him in the house without diversion and excitement, and he mopes, sulks, pines, and, sooner or later, breaks from wholesome parental restraints, and instinctively seeks for amusements, excitements, and pleasures elsewhere—at the club and too often the gambling hell and brothel. These natural instincts for diversion may be directed in such a manner by parents as to be productive of positive physical, moral and intellectual benefit, by investing home with a few of the attractions which beckon them elsewhere. Give them comfortable billiard rooms and billiard tables, so that both body and mind can be amused and invigorated, and the attractions and pleasures of home will be superior to those beyond its boundaries.

Billiards is a mathematical game, and affords scope and exercise for those faculties which discipline and strengthen the mind. A steady hand, a clear head, quick perception, and a pleasant exercise of the calculating powers, are the requisites for an accomplished billiard player. The practical development of these qualities must naturally be productive of good results.

The game of billiards was invented in France. The name is derived from bille, a ball.

Charles IX of France, married Elizabeth of Austria, in 1570, and the wedding was signalized by the serving up at the table of the first turkeys ever seen in France. A year after this event, and a year before the death of this young queen, the game of billiards was invented by Henrique de Vigne, a French artist, in 1571. The new game became immediately popular at the French Court, and was soon known to the Germans, the Dutch, Italians, and the various nations of Europe. Burton, the author of the "Anatomy of Melancholy," mentions billiards among the fifteen popular "winter recreations" in vogue in England at the end of that century. Of some other amusements he thus speaks:—"Cards, dice, hawkes and hounds are rocks upon which men lose themselves when they are improperly handled and beyond their fortunes." Hunting and hawking he regards as "honest recreations, and fit for some great men, but not for every base or inferior person;" for "while they maintain their falconer, and dogs, and hunting nags, their wealth runs away with their hounds, and their fortunes fly away with the hawkes."

In more recent times various improvements have been made in the construction of billiard tables. Tables made of slate were introduced into England in 1827. The skill of American manufacturers now leaves nothing further to be desired.

J. LESTER WALLACK.

This popular actor and manager was born in New York in 1819. He is the son of the late Henry Wallack, and made his first appearance on the stage in 1847, under the name of J. W. Lester, at the old Broadway Theatre in this city, as Charles Surface in "School for Scandal." Visited London, and made his debut at the Haymarket Teeatre with great success. On the 21st of September, 1857, appeared in Philadelphia, at the Walnut Street Theatre, as Viscount de Ligny, in "Captain of the Watch." Mr. Wallack is a careful dresser, and his "make up" is so excellent as, for a time, to deceive the audience as to his identity. He was not intended for the stage, and though in his younger days a constant visitor at the theatre, he did not display any of those characteristics which are inseparable from the embryo player. This gentleman has great requisites for the stage—he has a very elegant figure, and a voice which is so powerful without effort, and extensive in its compass, that it attains with the utmost ease everything which dramatic art requires. Mr. Wallack, since the death of his father, has seldom appeared on the stage, but has devoted all his time to the management of Wallack's Theatre in this city.

THE BOSTON YACHT CLUB.

Some weeks since we alluded to the fact that a number of prominent citizens of Boston and other cities of the New England coast, interested in aquatic pastimes, were agitating the subject of forming a club with the above title. We are pleased to state the subject has at last assumed a definite shape, an organization having been effected at the Parker House on the evening of the 21st ult., when about sixty of the ninety gentlemen who had pledged themselves to become members were present. The meeting was called to order by Capt. Thos. Manning, Augustus Russ being chosen secretary pro tem. A constitution, similar in its provisions to that of the New York Yacht Club, was adopted. The only article which gave rise to discussion was that relative to the election of members, the committee having reported that two black balls should exclude a candidate. Mr. G. W. Warren proposed to amend by making one-fifth of the votes necessary to rejection, which amendment was adopted. The following officers were then chosen to serve during the ensuing year:—Commodore, Dexter F. Follett; Vice Commodore, Thomas Manning; Measurer, Dexter S. Stone; Secretary, Thomas Dean; Treasurer, Augustus Russ; Trustees, Benjamin Dean, Arthur Cheney and William T. Adams.

After the appointment of committees to engage suitable rooms for club purposes and to draft by-laws, the meeting adjourned for two weeks. The following is a list of the yachts now registered on the rolls of the club—a record which is certainly creditable to the energy of the movers in the projects:—

SCHOONERS.—Nettie, Dexter H. Follett; Juniata, Arthur Cheney; Minnie, Thomas Manning; Marie, H. B. Jackson; Mercury, J. E. Herman and others; John Quincy Adams, Augustus Lothrop; Carrie, F. Bebbea; Dawn, T. P. Barnes, jr.; Trifle, Alonzo Masters; Electra, J. H. Sears; Ellie, A. Freeman, of Dorchester.

SLOOPS.—Columbia, A. & C. E. Russ; Violet, E. Denton; Kelpie, G. H. Bates; Mist, J. H. Pitman; Clitheroe, Benj. Dean; Parquetta, Joseph Groce; Bristol, C. C. Sheafe; Scud, C. E. Folsom; Macduff, H. Hilt; Ella, J. Grier; Fannie, Capt. Gibbs, of Wareham; Clytie, D. S. Stone, of Bristol; Cruiser, T. Tileston, of Dorchester; Irene, B. Jenney; Newsboy, J. P. Scudder; Fanchon, J. B. Herreshoff, of Bristol, R. I.; Henrietta, T. W. Camm, of Providence, R. I.; Grace, C. D. Macomber.

ROWING IN SAN FRANCISCO BAY.—On Sunday, Oct. 21, there was a boat race in the bay for the champion silver cup of California, between the Unknown, pulled by M. Long; the Coquette, by James Powers; Fort Hill Boy, by E. Nelson; and Hannah K., by George Daley. The boats started at half past eleven o'clock, and got a very even start, but the Unknown and Fort Hill Boy soon took the lead. Just after starting the Coquette and Hannah K. collided, but resulted in no serious injury to either. Before reaching the turning stake, Nelson's boat capsized, but he managed to get in it again. Daley did not turn the stake. The only ones that did go around it were the Unknown and Coquette. In returning to the outcome, the Hannah K. came in first, Unknown second, Coquette third, and Fort Hill Boy fourth. The race was given to the Unknown, Hannah K. not having gone over the proper course. The distance which Long pulled was three miles and three-quarters, in twenty-six minutes.

AMENDMENTS TO THE RULES.

Among the changes and additions required to be made to the playing rules of the game are the following, which we submit to the Committee of Umpires as worthy their attention:—

All balls delivered by the pitcher, on which the umpire either calls a "baulk" or "one ball," should be considered as "dead" balls, and consequently not balls on which the striker can be put out either "on the fly" or by a throw to a base. This change could be introduced at the end of Section 6, by adding the following words:—"Whenever a 'baulk' is made or a 'ball' is called by the umpire, should the striker hit such baulked ball or ball called 'one ball' or 'two balls,' he shall not be put out by such ball being caught or passed to a base, such ball being considered 'dead,' and not in play until again delivered to the bat."

The point we allude to is:—Suppose the striker has hit twice at a ball and missed, and, having called for a ball "knee high," one is sent to him shoulder high, and he hits at it—say from being tired of waiting for a ball he wants—and again misses it, and it be caught on the bound, the umpire at the same time calling "one ball," we contend that the call of a "ball" at once puts the ball out of play and makes it "dead," and, as a dead ball, no player should be put out on it. Supposing, also, that instead of missing he hits it, and it be caught on the fly, the fact of its being called a ball just previous to the strike should make the ball dead, and prevent the striker from being put out. Just so, also, in the case of a baulk being made; at the same time that the striker hits the "baulked" ball, he should not be considered out if the ball is either caught or thrown to a base. Several instances of this kind occurred this season, and there being nothing definite in the rules about it, considerable dispute arose as to the legality or equity of the two decisions rendered, the one giving the man out on the catch and the other not out.

Another point not definitely settled by the existing rules is, in regard to a fly ball dropped from the hands of one player, and yet caught by another before touching the ground. This is a legitimate catch in cricket, and ought to be to base ball, both as regards a fair ball on the fly, and a foul ball on the bound.

There is at present a clause in one of the rules which conflicts with a clause in another. Thus, for instance, in one place it says that "the striker" shall be considered the striker until he has made the first base, and yet, in another rule, the words read so as to make the striker a "player running the base" the moment he hits a fair ball. The simple fact in these cases is, that he is considered the striker until he has made the first base, in the case of a man running home when two bases are out, and also in the case of men being forced to vacate their bases, and yet not the latter when he hits a ball fair, and close to the base, and is thrown out by a fielder before reaching the first base. Now, he is either one person or the other—he should be—all the time. If he is to be considered the striker until he reaches the first base, as such he cannot be put out by being touched between home and first base, because the rule which puts a player out in this manner requires the person touched to be "a player running the base," for the rule in question says "any player running the base is out if touched by a fielder without some part of his person being on a base." Again, the committee in their appendix, have decided the base bag to be the base, but there is nothing in the rules confirming it.

We are also in favor of a strict and well worded definition of what the rules consider as a jerked or thrown ball. The rules in reference to pitching simply state that the ball shall not be jerked or thrown, but pitched. Now different umpires have different notions in regard to the movements constituting thrown, jerked and pitched balls, and it is desirable that as much discretionary power be taken out of the hands of umpires as possible. We would suggest, therefore, an amendment to the rules in reference to pitching, which shall clearly define what a jerk and a throw is. Thus, for instance, an amendment to section 7 might read, "and the ball shall be considered as 'jerked,' in the meaning of the rule, if the arm of the pitcher touch the side of his body when it is swinging forward to deliver the ball." And furthermore it might read, "and the ball shall be regarded as a thrown ball if the arm be bent at an angle from the hand, or held out on a line from the shoulder," as in cricket when the bowler delivers a round arm ball.

We go in for allowing the pitcher to send in a ball any way he likes, provided he stands within the lines of his position, with both feet on the ground, and neither throws nor jerks a ball as above described.

In regard to the size of the ball many hold to the opinion that it is yet too large. The great force with which the present sized ball is sent from the bat is such as to make broken fingers a common occurrence, and the ratio of increase in power of impetus given by the addition of even a quarter of an ounce in weight and half an inch in size, or lessened by a decrease of weight and size, to that extent, is greater than many would imagine. The size of a cricket ball is a model for the game, and it would be an improvement to reduce the base ball to the same size. It is now the same weight and ought to be of proportionate size.

The above are but a few of the amendments which we deem important to a perfection of the rules. We have some suggestions of correspondents to offer, which are worthy of attention. The Committee on Rules met on the 21st, and had a busy session of three hours, and they are to meet again on Friday, Nov. 30th, at the Gotham Cottage, 298 Bowery. Only a quorum was present at the first meeting, and we hope all the members will put in an appearance next week.

BALL PLAY IN THE OLD DOMINION.

Below is the score of a game played between the above junior clubs at

30. No blows were exchanged in this round, as the combatants rushed to a clinch, and White was thrown, with Carr on top.

31. White delivered his left on Carr's right cheek, and instantly fell, a heavy blow passing over his head.

32. White put in a little one on Carr's mouth, receiving one in the breast, and getting down easily. Carr rushed to hit him, but was too late.

33. White hit Carr on the top of the head and went down in a flash, the latter letting his left passby fly over his head.

34. This, five a number of the last rounds, was very brief. Carr, as soon as he left his second's knee, flew at White, and, hitting him in the neck, the latter fell.

35. Carr came up trying to laugh, but his "mug" was not altogether in laughing shape. He then rushed at White, and striking out wildly, the latter fell to avoid the blow without being hit, and there was another cry of "foul," but this came from Carr's corner. The referee again said, "fight on."

36. Several hits were made by both parties, but they all missed their mark. White, however, at last put in a weak one on Carr's neck and fell to avoid being hit. Carr stood over him laughing until taken away, and no one yet knew except White and a newspaper reporter that the former's shoulder was broken, so skilfully had he concealed the fact.

37. Carr landed a right hander on the left side of White's head, and the latter went down, and while lying on his back, Carr had to be restrained from hitting him by White's seconds. He seemed now perfectly wild, and said he could lick Collyer, when the latter laughed at him.

38. Carr rushed at White, when the latter fell without being hit, and "foul" was again claimed by Carr's partisans, but not allowed, as it was asserted that he struck out as he fell.

39. White put in a rap on Carr's forehead and fell down to avoid Carr's rushes. The latter then walked up to the referee and complained of White's style of fighting, proclaiming it foul and unmanly, and so it really seemed to those who did realize White's condition.

40. White sent his left on a mission, and it landed on Carr's mouth, in return for which he got a rap in the breast and went down in an instant.

41. White got a blow in the breast and again went down and escaped a stinger that flew over his head. Carr's friends were now very boisterous, and one of them called out to take White away, but the latter's friends boasted that he "could fight all day."

42. White struck out and threw himself down at the same moment to escape a swinging left hander at the head, and the cry of "foul" passed unheeded.

43. White struck Carr on the forehead and fell before being hit, although Carr made a determined effort to reach him.

44 and last. White got in a swift shot on Carr's right eye, and, the latter rushing at him furiously, White dropped, and while on the ground was struck in the breast a powerful blow by Carr, The referee, of course, could not pass this palpably foul act, and at once declared that White had won the fight.

A terribly confused state of affairs followed, but in a short time all became quiet, and acknowledged that the referee's decision was just, and then for the first time was White's broken shoulder shown to the crowd.

The fight lasted thirty-six minutes. The men were not much hurt, and but for the slight abrasure on White's left cheek, no one would have supposed that he had been in a fight. Carr's face was considerably swollen; his left eye was puffed up, and his nose and mouth a good deal damaged, yet he says he was not half whipped.

As soon as the fight was over a stampede was made for the steamboat to return to Washington, when she was found fast aground, and her passengers were delayed several hours down the Potomac by the accident. However, there was no complaining, no jarring nor fighting on board the boat, and the company returned from their "moonlight excursion," as this trip was called on the bills and tickets, the most quiet and peaceable party of pugilistic patrons ever assembled in America.

REMARKS.

However unsatisfactory the issue may be to the friends of Carr, they must be pretty well satisfied that, barring the accident to White's right shoulder, which completely disabled that arm, proved himself Carr's superior vastly in point of science and judgment, and it is agreed by his friends that had the fight continued his opponent must soon have become blind, and, per se, helpless. Carr's impetuosity and lack of prudence operated against him, and could he but keep cool and calculate his chances, fighting more with the head, he would prove a troublesome customer, very. He is too anxious to be doing something, and his want of caution caused him to become a victim to White's science, as that worthy's left duke was almost continually in Carr's face, and he seldom or ever attempted to hit without making up his mind where he was going to plant his fist. This it was that operated so detrimentally on Michael's optics, and how it was the latter didn't find out his sore spot, and make that the main point of attack, is due to his over-willingness to be at work. Carr fought better than had previously been credited to him, and the upshot will no doubt bring about another match with some other boxer on more even terms, when we shall see him to better advantage, as he must learn by experience how necessary it is to observe caution and keep his temper. White's tactics in going down, though partly excusable and wise on his part, owing to the accident in the first round, are not such as we can recommend, and in a future match we think he will adopt another course and stand up like a man. White fought to save his backers' money, and succeeded in so doing, and right or wrong, no one has any right to find fault with the referee, who was mutually chosen, and no doubt acted to the best of his ability.

OFF FOR SOUTH AMERICA.—Ed. James Tuohey, of the Dry Dock, whose battles with Johnny McMann, Billy McGrath and Owney Geogheghan has made his name famous as a pugilist, left this city from pier 43, foot of Spring street, N. R., on Thursday, Nov. 22, per steamship "South America," for Rio de Janeiro, under the auspices of the Brazilian Emigration Society, there to settle and work at his trade as a boiler maker. Very flattering inducements are held out to mechanics by this society, which takes them free and boards them when they get there, giving them a certain time to pay these obligations back. It was expected that the Emperor of Brazil would be on hand to welcome the party and escort them to their boarding house, No. 173 Rua da Imperatriz (Imperial street), at Rio de Janeiro. Tuohey and his associates are not going it blind, Ed's brother having been there under similar circumstances, and bringing a good report therefrom. We wish them all a pleasant trip.

DUTCH CHARLEY ACQUITTED.—We learn by telegraph that Charles P. Duane, better known as Dutch Charley, has been acquitted of the murder of Col. Ross in California, it having been proved that Ross had threatened to kill him on sight, but Charley happened to get in the first shot. His brother John, too, had been released on a "nolle pros," the prosecution being unwilling to go on with the case. There is a bit of romance attached to this case which is not generally known. It appears that many years ago, when Dutch Charley was a young man and a New York fireman, he saved the life of a little child when no one else dared to go in to the burning building. This little child, now grown to womanhood and immensely wealthy, on hearing of the trouble Duane had got into, left this city for California to endeavor to save him, but when she arrived there, discovered that she was too late—Dutch Charley had been acquitted.

DOONEY HARRIS HEARD FROM.—This extraordinary British gladiator, who left these shores for the land of gold, Oct. 20, in the Ocean Queen, arrived at Aspinwall on Nov. 9, after one of the most delightful trips imaginable. Dooney complained of the heat there, the thermometer indicating 108 degrees in the shade. The passengers, some 800, all told, were to have left Aspinwall on the day above named, per steamship Golden City, for Frisco, so that, barring accidents, they have all arrived safely long before this. All hands were loud in their praise of the officers of the Queen, and a testimonial, with the tall son of Erin's signature (we mean Dick O'Neill, Kitty from Cork's affianced), amongst them, had been presented to the captain. As we have stated before, Dooney goes out to make a match with Tommy Chandler. Our next California advices will probably bring all particulars.

To Correspondents.

IN EXTREMIS.—Your sett to hand, but the White portion of the family has no solution.

CHAS. A. GILBERG.—Your note received; thanks for your promptness Nothing could be more welcome than the suggested contributions.

GEO. E. C., Louisville, Ky.—We should say that a sett of ivory chessmen would cost you in New York from $20 to $100, according to size and style.

INQUIRER.—No, the taking en passant does not in any way apply to the pieces.

J. C. ROMEYN.—We should be gratified to receive your paper.

THE BRITISH (ENG.) ATHENÆUM CHESS CLUB.—This large and flourishing society has lost the services of Capt. H. A. Kennedy, who has served as its President for over seven years, leading it along a career of almost unwavering prosperity to a stand of especial eminence in strength and numbers. Edmund Thorald, Esq., has been called to the post thus vacated.

A MODEL RECORD.—From the resume of the Everton C. C., of Liverpool, it appears that a statement has been carefully kept during the past year of the thirty members' contests, which shows that 2,767 games have been played. We consider that such a record should be kept in every Chess club, showing, as it does at a glance the relative strength of the members, the regularity of their attendance, and serving as a memorial of the progress of the society.

AMONG the busts of renowned musicians that by imperial order are to adorn the niches of the new opera house, Paris, is that of our revered Chess Grand Master, Philidor.

CHESS ON DIT.—That another match is likely to come off early in the season between Mr. Reichhelm and Capt. Mackenzie.

(a) We suspect that some of Prof. A's moves with his Q at an earlier period lost a little time. 14..Kt to K 6th would perhaps have been a better resource; for, although by the move in the text the Defence wins a P for the moment, he is placed immediately in difficulties.

(b) Kt to Q 5th looks promising, but careful examination will show that he is wanted to guard his own K 2d.

(c) This appears to be the primary cause of the loss of his passed P. It is difficult, however, to suggest a really good move for the Attack at this juncture.

(d) An excellent mode of putting his adversary directly on the defensive.

(e) 45..R to K R sq does not appear to be stronger.

City Summary.

MONDAY, Nov. 26, '66.

ÆSOP, the prince of fabulists; Pericles, the orator and statesman; Aristophanes, an Athenian comic poet; Plato, the philosopher; Demosthenes, one of the greatest of orators; Horace, the poet; Herodotus, a Greek historian; Diogenes, the cynic; and other men of great renown in ancient history, lived and flourished several hundred years before the birth of our Saviour; but take all these great men, boil them down to the standard measure of one individual, leaving only the genius of each, and still that one individual would but illy compare with he who forms the subject of our present discourse, and "whose name was never born to die"—Smith. The ancient mariners and other antediluvian residenters may have had their learned men, their men of genius, but what were they compared to Smith, the modern Smith, of the well known house of John. It remained for this enlightened age to produce a Fulton, a Jefferson, a Morse, a Siddons, a Spurgeon, a Beecher, and a host of other shining lights on the stage, in the forum, in science, the arts, etc., but high above this galaxy stands the proud name of Smith. We are led to these remarks by the appearance in this city recently of a great preacher named Smith, a synopsis of whose sermon at the Cooper Institute, on the 18th November, appeared in our last. Like all great actors Smith felt the necessity of making his mark in the metropolis, and though that mark may be a black mark, it is still a mark. Smith, it appears, went to see the "Black Crook," at Niblo's, as many other preachers had done before him, and as many are still doing; for be it ever so humble, the flesh is ever weak. Having seen the elephant and the bare dance at the theatre, our meek and lowly brother Smith determined to expiate his offence by preaching the "Black Crook," and all that therein is to the great masses of New York society, all on a Sabbath day. That the modern Cicero and the "Black Crook" should attract a crowded congregation at the Cooper Institute is not to be wondered at, for is not the fame of each widespread and mighty? Is it remarkable that the preacher should be applauded, his jokes laughed at, his double entendres appreciated, and the man guyed in the most approved dramatic fashion? Is it surprising that the manner in which this pure-minded minister of the gospel described the things he had witnessed at the theatre should excite impure and unchaste thoughts in the minds of his beloved hearers? What says the poet?

> Some go to church, proud, humbly, to repent,
> And come back much more guilty than they went.

And so it was with the masses who attended the reverend brother Smith's discourse. In an article in another part of this issue we give a few extracts from Smith's theatrical experience, merely remarking that the language ascribed to him must be correct, as we find it recorded in that monitor of morality, the New York Herald, in which brother Smith's establishment does advertise. We cannot do better, to commemorate Smith's visit to the theatre, than to indite a few verses in honor of that auspicious occasion:

MY PASTOR.

Who, when the churches didn't pay
For teaching how to watch and pray,
To other fields did take his way—
My Pastor.

Who left at home his bible book,
While he a stage in Broadway took
All for to see the famed "Black Crook?"
My Pastor.

Who in a choker very white,
And nose so red-lant and bright,
Watched the show with all his might?
My Pastor.

Who saw Sangalli's jolli jambs,
Which pleased him better far than psalms,
Who cried out bravo, "Bless the lambs?"
My Pastor.

Who, through the dancer's thin, gauze tights,
Saw flesh in all its shades and lights,
And gloried in the natural sights?
My Pastor.

Who traced the outlines clean and neat,
From bosom bare to sandal'd feet,
And said he never saw the beat?
My Pastor.

Who squirmed and wriggled in his seat,
(For preachers, e'en, are sometimes weak,
Although in general humbly meek)?
My Pastor.

Whose troubles served to irritate
All those who near the parson sate,
Who said he had the stomach ache?
My Pastor.

Who left the place in bad condition,
Attributed to the wedged position
He held while viewing the exhibition?
My Pastor.

Who lost his way in going home,
And got wherein "some love to roam"—
Ritooral lural, rumti tum—
My Pastor.

Who thinks six days are not enough
Wherein to see the "Black Crook" stuff,
And resolves to give it a Sunday puff?
My Pastor.

Who straightway hires the Cooper Institute, (with the Herald as roper in,)
And finds full many a dropper in—
My Pastor.

Who filled his hearers with delight,
In telling of the shameful sight
He saw at Niblo's on that night?
My Pastor.

Whose labors in New York are done,
Whose moral mission he has run,
Who, preaching "Black Crook," greenbacks won?
My Pastor.

.....Talking of money made by this "Black Crook" business, permits us to enter our protest against the manner in which certain of the speculators interested play their parts. Read the following communication signed by three of the poor dancing girls engaged at Niblo's. The communication was addressed to the editor of the Herald:—

"Knowing the interest you take in all that concerns the drama and its professors, no matter how humble, we venture to address you on a matter that affects us nearly. At present we are but humble members of the theatre, but even we have our rights, which we believe to have been deliberately invaded. We are three English girls, members of the corps de ballet at Wheatley's Theatre, and are at present appearing nightly in the ballet. In the early part of the present year Messrs. Jarrett and Palmer, who were then in England, invited us to proceed to New York, and offered us respectively salaries of £3 per week. On making out our agreements, knowing our utter ignorance of the true value of American money, instead of inserting 'three pounds sterling,' as they distinctly promised us, they inserted the amount $15, which is the sum we are now receiving weekly, and which, in spite of repeated and earnest solicitations, they insist on paying us. On our arrival in New York we found that it takes $7 in greenbacks to make an English sovereign, and although we are in justice and honor bound to receive $21 (having solemnly been promised the value of £3) we continue to receive but $15. It is a well known fact that Messrs. Jarrett and Palmer are clearing a large sum weekly by their share in the theatre, and it seems a hard case that we three girls, with no other resources to depend on save and except the salary produced by our dancing, should each have to lose weekly $6, and we think it most unworthy on the part of Jarrett and Palmer to delude young girls from their homes in England by false representations as to the relative value of money. The $15 we are now receiving amount to about £2 [illegible] s., a very little more than our salary was in England, and it is not likely that we would cross the ocean and make a journey of over three thousand miles to better ourselves to the extent of fifteen shillings per week. When Jarrett and Palmer engaged us they knew perfectly well that $6 did not represent a sovereign, but they repeatedly assured us that [illegible] of [illegible] rate of [illegible] many little [illegible] salary, that [illegible] rage-ment [illegible] the cost [illegible] Here again [illegible] Mr. [illegible] press to [illegible] but [illegible] the Crook [illegible] ap-proaching [illegible] would purchase us some warm clothing, of which we are sorely in need. As we said before, we depend wholly and solely upon our salaries; and if you can spare us the humiliation of having to pledge our little finery and bits of jewelry that we brought with us from England we shall indeed feel grateful. Jarrett and Palmer, secure in their prosperity, may reply that they are fulfilling their contract by paying us $15 a week. Our reply is that we were told by these men that $15 was the same as £3. We now know that our just salary is $21 currency, and with nothing short of this will we be content.

"ELISE BURLINGHAM,
"ANNIE P. COOK,
"ROSE RYAN."

Pity the sorrows of these poor young girls, whose dancing limbs have borne them to our shore. Their's is but one of many similar cases we are frequently called upon to bring to the notice of the public. We are glad to see that Manager Wheatley is not implicated in this unbusiness-like piece of business, for we have always heard favorable accounts of his liberality to his people, and of his fair way of making engagements. If Messrs. Palmer and Jarrett, as alleged, agreed to pay these ballet girls three pounds weekly, each, for their services, they should abide by such agreement, and not attempt to make a five dollar greenback pass for an English pound. Man's inhumanity to woman makes thousands of them mourn. Men who trade in the physical beauties of young girls ought to pay well for the services of those they employ. To be sure, there are speculators who do pay well for the services of dancers, but then such dancers are favorites with their employers, and grant other favors, we are told, not set down in the agreement, but here are three young girls, reputed to be respectable, whose necessities compel them to enter the ballet at so much per week; they allege that they were promised three pounds each; on their arrival in a strange country they discover that five dollars of our currency is not one pound of English money; and as six dollars per week is a great item to them in helping to make up their weekly payment, it is not surprising that they should make public complaint against the speculators who engaged them, and seek to gain that which they allege to be their due. If Palmer and Jarrett conveyed the impression to these inexperienced young girls that fifteen dollars of our money were equal to three pounds sterling, they committed a great wrong, and should be made to disgorge; and if they really did commit such wrong, and refuse to make reparation, then it is time for Manager Wheatley to dissolve all connection with such men, if he means to preserve the reputation for fair dealing which he has heretofore held in this city. We know nothing of the matter further than what we find in the statement of the three ballet girls. Their word, however, is entitled to full as much weight as the word of the speculators who engaged them, if not more.

"FAIRIES OF THE HUDSON" is the title of the extravaganza written by John F. Poole expressly for Tony Pastor's Opera House, and produced there on Nov. 19th to a crowded house. It is something on the style of the "Seven Sisters," who come up from the mighty deep to see the sights on earth. The extravaganza opens with a submarine grotto under the Hudson River. The corps de ballet appear in a divertissement, surrounded by Neptune and his two sons. Tony Pastor then appears in the deep, coming from above, as Brother Jonathan. He invites old Neptune, his two sons and Hendrick Hudson to visit the earth and see New York. The scene changes to a street in New York, with the sea kings dressed as in modern times. They meet Johnny Bull, which is the second best dressed and acted part in the piece. The party now commence their rambles around town. They first visit Jerome Park on race day, after which a view of the Hudson is presented. The party are all of a sudden shown the Capitol at Washington, and the corps de ballet do a Zouave drill. They march very well, keep excellent time, and their movements were very soldierly. The scene changes to an American landscape and then to the Bowery, where a view of Tony Pastor's Opera House is presented by gas light. We next have a street in New York. After this, thirteen ladies appear in a march representing the thirteen original States; after which we are carried down to the abode of fairies of the Hudson, and the extravaganza ends with a display of red fire. The extravaganza is about the best thing that Mr. Poole has yet done. It is sharply written, is replete with fun, has capital hits at the times, and, taken altogether, reflects credit on the author. Mr. T. G. Rigge, as John Bull, was very good, and his frequent repetition of "blow me tight, ye know," brought down the house. He dresses the character well and acts with taste and discrimination. Tony Pastor made all that was possible out of Brother Jonathan. G. F. McDonald as Neptune, Mrs. Frank McDonald as Columbia, and Jennie Engel as the Queen, were all good. The piece has been placed upon the stage in a careful manner, every scene having been painted expressly for the occasion, and they are all very truthful and life-like representations. The scene of the grotto is very handsome. Crowded houses were in attendance every night last week. The "Fairies of the Hudson" keeps the bills this week.

STUART ROBSON commenced a brief engagement at the Olympic on Nov. 22d, making his debut in a burlesque on "Hamlet." It is by Robert H. Craig, a young man formerly connected with the company at the Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia. It is exceedingly well written and is brim full of fun. The best scenes of the play have been retained, and so travestied as to make them very laughable indeed. Many of the puns are not only original, but very clever. Mr. Craig has done his work well, and is capable of even better things. Mr. Robson played Hamlet. He dressed the character very well, and his reading was as ridiculous as the author intended it to be. The idea of Hamlet doing a song and dance and joining in a walk-around, is enough to make a saint laugh. Miss Harris' Ophelia was a big thing, in fact, as big as the lady herself, who made a healthy "Opheal." Her singing pleased the audience hugely, particularly the "Rat Catcher's Daughter." The Grave Digger's scene was rather laughable. Hamlet's apostrophizing over a huge pumpkin for a skull, created roars of laughter. The rest of the characters were in excellent hands, as ludicrously performed and dressed as possible, and for a first night went off very smoothly.

THE TEMPLE OF WONDERS is the name of a room show at 614 Broadway, where are on exhibition at all hours of the day two blood hounds named Hero and Spot. Hero was used at Castle Thunder and afterwards at Libby Prison for guarding Union prisoners. He is supposed to be the largest dog in this country. He weighs nearly 200lb, girths three feet and measures seven feet from tip to tip. He is a very ferocious looking animal. Spot is a Cuban blood hound, weighing nearly one hundred pounds, and is the only living hound of the pack of thirteen kept by Wirtz at the Andersonville prison, for guarding Union prisoners. There are also on exhibition the Mammoth horse "Great Eastern," weighing, it is stated, over 3350 pounds. He stands twenty hands high; girths nine feet five inches; wears a forty inch collar and nineteen inches in width. There is a dog with five legs and feet, and a lot of rattle snakes. The curiosities are really worth seeing, and all who have the opportunity should not let the present chance slip by.

A BENEFIT to Mrs. Wm. Rufus Blake is in preparation. The claims of this lady, not only as the widow of one of the greatest artists seen on the American stage, but as herself one of the most genial and delightful of actresses, will no doubt be heartily responded to by all theatre goers. The affair is in the hands of the leading members of the profession in the city.

KATE FISHER commenced an engagement at the New Bowery on the 19th inst., in "Mazeppa." She opened to an excellent house and continued to attract large audiences all the week. Kate plays Mazeppa equal to any at present in this country. She dresses the character very nicely, and plays the part satisfactorily. Kate has always been a great favorite with the Bowery boys, who did not forget her last week.

CHARLES DILLON terminates his present engagement at the Broadway, in this city, on Dec. 1st. Mr. Dillon was announced at the commencement of his engagement as having been secured for six weeks, but the present is only his fourth week. Kate Reignolds fills up the remaining two weeks. Mr. Dillon has attracted only fair houses. On two or three occasions the house has been very good, but not over crowded. His engagement has not been a great success pecuniarily, if it has artistically, and this is probably the cause of his not filling out the other two weeks. During the past week the only new character in which he appeared was that of Shylock. Mr. Dillon could not have made a more injudicious choice, for his performance of the role possessed very few beauties. So far it has been one of his weakest and most unsatisfactory impersonations. Edmund Kean is the only actor that has yet shown us the Jew that Shakespeare drew. This week Mr. Dillon and Miss Kate Reignolds both appear, the lady commencing one week earlier than was at first intended. The comedy of "Wonder" is presented this evening with Mr. Dillon as Felix and Miss Reignolds as Donna Violante. Mr. Dillon's farewell benefit takes place on Nov. 30th, when "Richard" is to performed.

GONE.—A few weeks since we had occasion to speak favorably of the singing of Mr. Aynsley Scott, then a member of the San Francisco Minstrels. We have now, we regret to say, to speak in less favorable terms of the man himself. On Monday, Nov. 19th, while his name was on the bills for the evening performance, Mr. Scott secretly got his clothes away from his dressing room, and left the city without giving the least notice to his managers or to others who were interested in his remaining here. What explanation the gentleman may be able to make for thus acting, we do not know; but unless he has some good ground for his secret mission, and informs the public thereof, managers will not be likely to engage him, for he might leave them also without notice. It is time managers entered into some arrangement to protect themselves against those who "fly by night" without previous notice, for such sudden "takings off" leave the managers in a bad fix when the time comes for the absentee to perform his part in the programme. We trust that Mr. Scott may be able to put in some just plea for his unseemly conduct, although any gentleman who "hath his quarrel just" need not take leave surreptitiously, as Mr. S. seems to have done.

CERTAINLY one of the most agreeable places of amusement in the city is that elegant and admirably conducted establishment, the New York Circus, which, under the judicious management of Mr. L. B. Lent, has become a favorite resort of the best families of the metropolis. Everything about the place is so bright and inviting, and the performances are of such unvarying excellence, that no one can fail to be highly gratified by a visit, whatever may be the programme presented. This week is a busy one at the circus, for there are no less than four matinees announced, in addition to the regular night entertainments, a sure sign of a thriving business. One of these is on Thursday, Thanksgiving day, when a great rush may be anticipated. The attractions offered for the present week are of the first order, the principal features being the dashing equestrianism of Mad'lle DeBerg, who never fails to inspire the audience with marked enthusiasm, and the really wonderful tight-rope exercises of El Nino Eddie, the extraordinary child artist, whose remarkable ability has been frequently noticed in these columns. This little fellow also rides a most pleasing act of horsemanship, which is always received with merited applause. There are many other performers of much more than ordinary merit included in Mr. Lent's troupe, which is one of the most complete, in all respects, that has ever been brought together in New York. Joe Pentland and Nat Austin, the clowns, are prime favorites with the frequenters of the establishment, and possess the great and uncommon merit of generally knowing when they have talked enough. Clowns are indispensible personages in a circus, but it is not necessary that they should occupy the whole performance to the exclusion of everything else, and, we may add, to the disgust of their auditors. Short stories do the thing.

PROF. LOCKENIA, magician, lately performing in the side show with Stone, Rogston & Co's. Circus, sailed for Europe on Nov. 24th.

SAMUEL GRAY, ventriloquist, has arrived in the city.

IN TOWN.—John Murray, Geo. Hutchinson and Den Stone, of the Stone, Rogston and Murray's circus, are in the city.

"GRIFFITH GAUNT" is enjoying a succession of crowded houses at the New York Theatre. It has proved anything but a gaunt speculation for the management.

"THE FEMALE CLERKS OF WASHINGTON," in conjunction with a variety of negro and other acts, affords about three hours' enjoyment for the patrons of Charley White's Hall. Business continues first rate, and Charley White's name on the books of the revenue collector shows a healthy return for the establishment.

TWO QUIET LASSES was one of the negro acts performed at Budworth's Minstrel Hall last week by W. S. Budworth, Griffin and Hodgkin. It was rather short, but what there was of it caused considerable laughter. James Budworth gave his Dutch characterizations, which are all very clever. C. Henry's singing of "Beautiful Isle of the Sea" and "Thou Art So Near," was one of the features of the first part. This gentleman is one of the sweetest ballad singers in the business and has very few equals. The "Trip to the Moon" continues as the afterpiece, and it is so very laughable that it sends the audience away in such good humor that they are determined to come "just once more." A matinee is given there on Saturday.

MRS. D. P. BOWERS closed at the Winter Garden on Nov. 23d. For her benefit and last appearance "Romeo and Juliet" was given, with Mrs. Bowers as Juliet and Mrs. F. B. Conway as Romeo. The house was crowded and the reception of the beneficiaire was very enthusiastic. Mrs. Conway was also well received. The performance was with one or two exceptions, excellent. Mrs Bowers is one of the best Juliets we have ever seen. She understands the character thoroughly and acts with great taste and discrimination. We have seen a great many worse Romeos than Mrs. Conway's. McCollom's Mercutio is the best character we have yet seen him in. The lady who played the Nurse was very bad indeed.

"OURS," a comedy lately written in England by Messrs. Robertson and Artemus Ward, is in rehearsal at Wallack's Theatre, in which Lester Wallack will appear.

KELLY AND LEON'S MINSTRELS, with their panorama of "A Trip Round the World," attracted crowded audiences to their bijou of a Minstrel Hall every evening last week. The "trip" is made every evening this week and those who wish to make the voyage should pay the minstrels a visit.

THE PERFORMANCES given at Barnum's Museum last week were highly appreciated by the large crowds present every evening. After the performance of the "Honey Moon," the stage was taken up and the ring formed for the animals. The performing elephant "Jenny Lind" was introduced by Mr. George Hall. This was followed by the cages of performing animals, in which Mons. Davis stirred up the lions, and while in the den went through a variety of tricks. The trick ponies and monkeys appeared, to the delight of the little ones. The comic mules concluded the entertainment. John Foster appeared as jester to the circle. The large collection of animals in the four saloons attract considerable attention from the visitors.

SALLIE HINCKLEY'S engagement at the New York Theatre has been postponed for a few weeks, in consequence of the continued success of "Griffith Gaunt." This will give the management more time to get up Sallie's show piece called "Cindrillon," which has already been in preparation several weeks. During this lady's visit to Paris, a few months ago, she purchased this piece, and we are told that considerable money is being expended for its production.

SEVERAL NEW ACTS are to be produced this week by the San Francisco Minstrels. Whatever the sensation of the day may be, the management seize upon it and place it before the public in a burlesque shape. So far they have been successful in all their productions. The "Black Crook" and "Meteoric Showers" remain on the bills this week.

THAT CLOG CHALLENGE.—Among our advertisements this week will be found a card from Mr. Goldsmith, in answer to Annie Gibbons to compete with him for the championship. He declines to dance with a lady, but says he has repeatedly challenged Dick Sands and Tim Hayes to dance him for any amount of money and the championship. He also states that he is prepared to dance any man living a clog dance for the championship, and is ready to put up any amount of money. Now, here is a chance for Mr. Sands or Tim Hayes to prove their right to the title they have long claimed of being the "champion clog dancer of America."

ESTELLE POTTER is at present in the city, and is ready to treat with managers for brief engagements.

GYMNASTS, comedians, tragedians, ladies in every branch of the dramatic profession, pantomimists, vocalists, Ethiopian comedians, trick and talking clowns, Equestrians, in fact, every kind of a performer can be engaged through Messrs. Frank Rivers & Co., dramatic agent's. For particulars, see the advertisement of this firm in another part of this paper.

MESSRS. CONNER & CO., long known in the dramatic agency business, continue at their headquarters, 534 Broadway, this city. There, at all hours of the day, can be found a host of performers in every branch of the show business. This firm does a lively business with the show folk.

THE OLD BOWERY UNDER THE HAMMER.—That time honored place of amusement, the Old Bowery, was sold at auction on Nov. 23d. The sale was to satisfy a mortgage given by the late Thomas Hamblin to John S. Giles, as trustee of certain stockholders of the theatre to secure payment of a number of shares of the stock, which were valued at the time (1848) at $500 each. Subsequently a suit was commenced to recover the sum of $57,631 95 claimed to be due to the family of Mr. Hamblin. The mortgage in question became due in 1856, when Mrs. Shaw, widow of Hamblin, claimed for her portion $10,826 38, and the court appointed a referee to decide whether the property mortgaged could be sold in parcels without doing injury to the interest of any of the parties concerned, and he decided that it could not, and it was ordered to be sold at public auction, subject to a prior incumbrance of $40,000 on the same, held by William B. Astor by way of mortgage. In pursuance of these instructions, the sale was ordered. The amount claimed by Mrs. Shaw and her children now exceeds $80,000. The original mortgage given by Mr. Hamblin was only for $8,508 04. The auctioneer first offered eight-ninths of the property, the owner of the other ninth consenting to sell at the same rate as the rest, and subject also to the mortgage. Mr. Jh. Phillips bid $60,000 at which sum it was knocked down, but in the matter, and the entire property was then offered free from all incumbrances, except the lease. It was started at $75,000, and $80,000, $90,000 and $91,000 were offered, and the bids then increased by $500 until the amount reached $100,000, and finally the property was knocked down for $100,700 to a Mr. J. W. Dimmick. The purchaser was reqired to pay ten per cent. of the purchase money at once, and the balance, including the auctioneer's fee of $200, on the 20th of December next. There was rather a numerous assemblage around the stand of Mr. Anthony J. Bleecker, but the bids were not very spirited. There were not half a dozen theatrical people present. The present lease expires on May 17th, when, in all probability, it will be torn down and stores occupy its site.

"LEAH" IN COURT AGAIN.—On Nov. 19, in the Marine Court, before Judge Acker, a suit was brought by Mr. Bienville, the translator of the play, against Augustin Daly. The complaint set forth that the plaintiff was engaged by the defendant to translate a play known as "Deborah; or Leah the Forsaken," for doing which he was to receive $12 and one-third of the profits of the sale; that the defendant sold said play to Mr. Bateman, and received therefor $1,100, of which sum plaintiff is entitled to one-third, $350. The complaint also set forth that the plaintiff translated for the defendant a play named "Orpheus in Hell," for which he was to receive $3 per act, and one-third profits; a play called "Marguerite," at $3 per act, and 25 per cent profits; a play called "The Village Maiden," for which he was to receive $50, and a play called "La Papillion, or Taming a Butterfly," for which he was to receive the same price. The defendant admitted engaging the plaintiff to translate "Deborah" for $12 and "Orpheus in Hell" for $12, but denied promising any part of the profits. He admited engaging him to translate "Marguerite," but alleged that he only agreed to give him 15 per cent on the performance, and that the play was never performed. Defendant alleged that he agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $50 for the play of the "Village Maiden," when he sold it, but that the play was never sold, and that he also agreed to pay him 15 per cent on the play of "Taming a Butterfly;" that all he can reasonably claim is for the first play, $12; for the second, $12; for the third, $18; for the fourth. $9; and for the fifth, $9—the fifth being only a skeleton, and intended to be used as a foundation for other plays. The plaintiff, on being called to the stand, testified that in 1862 the defendant called on him to read the play of "Deborah," which he did at defendant's residence; there were present on that occasion defendant, his brother and plaintiff; defendant said he had been spoken to about a play by Mr. Bateman; he spoke of "Deborah;" he wished plaintiff to translate it into English; he wished his brother Joseph to adapt it to the stage; he said he would give me $12 to translate it; he asked me if I thought the play would be suitable for Mr. Bateman; the defendant said that when he received the profits he would divide them; Jos. F. Daly, brother of the defendant, and I were to adapt it to the stage (manuscript here shown); this is a copy of the original play of "Deborah," afterward known as "Leah, the Forsaken;" I never received more than $32 from the defendant for translating plays. Mr. Bateman testified that he had purchased a play called "Deborah" from the defendant, for $250, and paid him for it copyright and all; that he gave the name of Leah to it himself; that he afterwards, at different times, gave the defendant $299, $150, and $600 or $700; he gave him in all about $1,300; the play as translated could not have been put upon the stage. Augustin Daly, the defendant, testified that the only agreement he made with the plaintiff was to pay him $12 for translating the play of "Deborah" (afterward called "Leah"); but nothing had been said about giving him any share in the profits; he also agreed to give him $12 for translating the play of "Orpheus in Hell;" that play had never been sold; that plaintiff asked 25 per cent. of the profits for translating "Marguerite," but afterward agreed to take 15 per cent.; that for the play of the "Village Maiden," which plaintiff translated, he never received a cent; that the play of "Marguerite" is now in the hands of an actress, and will shortly be produced; the bill he received from plaintiff did not include the play of "Leah." On the 20th the case was resumed and concluded. Mr. D. M. O'Brien, in summoning up on behalf of the defendant, said this case was palpably a conspiracy to extort money from the defendant and soothe the injured feelings of Mr. Bateman, who was the chief instigator in the matter. Although there was no evidence of such before the jury, yet he contended that was the fact, as the plaintiff had never made any claim until the defendant sued Mr. Bateman. If the jury found that it was agreed to pay the plaintiff one third of the profits of "Leah," he was only to receive one third of $250, since, as appeared by the testimony of Mr. Bateman, that was the only purchase price, and the other, one thousand odd dollars, were given to the defendant by Mr. Bateman as a gift. Judge Alker having briefly charged the jury, they retired for consultation, and after a short absence returned into court with a verdict for the plaintiff for $146. The judge, on application of counsel, said this was a proper case for an allowance.

EDWIN BOOTH commences his engagement at the Winter Garden on November 27th as Hamlet, supported by Mad. Scheller. Mr. Booth will play Tuesday, Thursday and Friday evenings, and Wednesday's matinee each week, the rest of the week being filled by the Italian Opera Troupe.

OLIVE LOGAN made her debut on the French stage at the French Theatre on Nov. 24th, in the petite comedy of "Five Hundred Francs de Recompense."

RISTORI closed her second engagement in this city on Nov. 24th, with a matinee performance of "Mary Stuart."

SMITHE'S harangues at the "Black Crook" have been the means of sending more people to witness the "Naked Truth" than any other gag that could have been thought of, had it been necessary to resort to that style of business. But the "Crook" has got the public just where manager Wheatley wants it, and it is a sure card for several months to come.

IN TOWN.—Estelle Potter McDonald and Julia Dean Hayne arrived from the Pacific slope last week. Billy O'Neil is reported as having arrived during the week, but we have not seen him.

HELEN WESTERN HERNE sails for San Francisco on Dec. 1st, under engagement to Maguire.

PRESENTATION.—Mr. James Robinson, the "champion bareback rider of the world," sailed for Havana on Nov. 22d, to play at Albisu's circus. A few days previous to his sailing he was presented by a number of friends with a splendid set of silver, consisting of pitcher, two goblets and salver. They were magnificently gotten up, and the engraving of "Jimmy" and his son Clarence in different positions was exceedingly well done.

JORDAN is said to be a hard road to travel. The truth of this remark will be tested shortly in this city, as Mr. George Jordan has, as we announced some time ago, been engaged at the Olympic, and is to make his debut there in two weeks in a new version of "The Master of Ravenswood." As soon as Mr. Jordan gets through let's have Boucicault, Belle Boyd and any other members of the profession, who, during our late troubles, fled to England, and did all in their power to inflame the minds of all with whom they came in contact against the North.

A SEASON OF ITALIAN OPERA commences at the Winter Garden this evening. "Crispino E La Comare" is the initial opera.

"THE LONG STRIKE," which has not succeeded as well as we anticipated, is still on the bills of the Olympic, in conjunction with the burlesque of "Hamlet." No piece has been better produced in New York than has the "Strike," but it has failed to make the strike that Manager Grover thought it would.

KATE FISHER continues at the New Bowery Theatre. The "Three Fast Men" is revived this evening.

THANKSGIVING DAY will be observed by most of the city theatres with matinee performances. At Niblo's "The Black Crook" will be given. "Griffith Gaunt" at the New York Theatre. Charles Dillon and Kate Reignolds appear at the Broadway. "The Fairies of the Hudson" at Tony Pastor's. The "Long Strike" and the burlesque of "Hamlet" at the Olympic. Hourly performances will be given at Barnum's. Charley White will do up "The Female Clerks of Washington" and at the Circus the equestrian performances.

WM. H. BROCKWAY, violinist, joins Kelly and Leon's Minstrels this evening.

A WORD ABOUT "GRIFFITH GAUNT."—We are informed by Miss Reignolds that she some time ago commissioned Mr. Aug. Daly to dramatize "Griffith Gaunt" for her, making several suggestions of which the author has availed himself, and accepting his own terms, by which the piece was to become her exclusive property. Miss Reignolds accordingly copyrighted the dramatization as proprietor, and was surprised to see on her arrival from Toronto, C. W., that Mr. Daly had sold her version to the New York Theatre. By the advice of her lawyers Miss Reignolds took no steps to interdict the performance at the above theatre, but caused a new dramatization to be written. Miss Reignolds proposes holds the copyright of both versions.

THE LAST LAY OF THE MINSTREL.—Thomas Gethings, a well known minstrel performer, died in this city on Friday evening, Nov. 23d, of consumption, aged 22 years. His funeral took place on Sunday, 25th, from 167 East Nineteenth street, and his remains were conveyed to Calvary Cemetery. The funeral was attended by a number of the minstrel profession.

"THE METEORIC SHOWERS OR FALLING STARS" performance that did not take place last week in public, although so set down by the wise acres and which proved a great disappointment to many of our citizens, who sat up two nights in succession going one eye on it, was to be seen every evening last week at the San Francisco Minstrel Hall. It was a big card for the boys and is on for the current week. W. P. Grier, basso, takes the place of Aynsly Scott this week. Scotty sherried his nibbs last week just after receiving his last week's "blunt."

Dramatic.

EDWIN ADAMS, says our Memphis correspondent, writing on Nov. 16th, "is playing his second week at the New Memphis Theatre to a good business. He has produced the drama of 'Clairvoyance' in fine style. To-night it is produced for the fifth time, for the benefit of Mr. A., whose acting of Jean Vanbaron is excellent. Wheelock's Villain was well rendered. Mr. and Mrs. Lanagan were excellent in their characters. Mr. Marston is very funny and natural. Marston is steadily gaining ground in the good graces of our citizens. A Miss Gilbert (a child ten years of age) plays a part in this piece in a manner that will favorably compare with Ellen Bateman, when her efforts were pronounced to be wonderful by people both before and behind the curtain. .....At the Greenlaw Opera House the Webb Sisters are playing, but not with success in a pecuniary point of view."

MISS FANNY B. PRICE closed at Schroder's New Opera House, at Bloomington, Ill., on Nov. 24th. She will commence an engagement of two weeks at Vicksburg, Miss., Dec. 3d.

CAROLINE HAYES' DRAMATIC TROUPE commenced a traveling tour last week, giving their first performance in Binghampton, N. Y., on Nov. 19th. They opened in the drama of "Crehoore na Bilhoge," which portrays very forcibly many striking features of the Irish character. As this was the first time the members of the company ever appeared together before the public, there were many inaccuracies visible. The night was a stormy one, and the attendance light. "Miriam's Crime" was given on the 20th; "War to the Knife" on the 21st, and on the 22d, "The Four Sisters," "Handy Andy" and "The Widow's Victim." A correspondent says:—"There are many who do not seem to appreciate the talents and qualifications of Miss Hayes as a star. I sympathized with this feeling in a measure, for I think that a star should be able to carry her own part thoroughly, independent of the diffidence of minor support."

LAURA KEENE, with her company, is billed at Binghampton, N. Y., for Nov. 28th, to appear in "Our American Cousin;" on the 29th, in "School for Scandal;" the 30th, in "Lady of Lyons," and Dec. 1st, in "She Stoops to Conquer."

THE DRAMATIC COMBINATION, under the management of Cordelia Cappell and J. B. Everham, was at Bechtel Hall, Trenton, N. J., last week. "Fanchon" was played on Nov. 22d, with Jenny Kemble as the Cricket.

EMMA MADDERN terminated her engagement at the Montgomery, Ala., Theatre, on Nov. 17th. A correspondent says:—"This young actress has, in an incredibly short space of time, become a very general favorite with all. As a danseuse, she is as agile and graceful as an untamed antelope. As a pantomimist, she is equal to any I have ever seen. As a vocalist, her voice, unusually attractive in itself, is made to secure additional admiration from the audience, while, as an actress, she is one of the most brilliant on the stage. Although I admire a tragic heroine, yet in the mirthful, dashing, rollicking character Miss Maddern has made her peculiar study, there is a charm that none can appreciate more than myself. In her famous song of the 'Bould Sojer Boy' she beat the drum with an easy gracefulness that would have fairly astonished the Drum Major of a veteran Regiment had he been present; and many of the boys in gray, who had heard such music upon many a hard fought field, declared they never heard a performance to surpass it."

A GAY OLD TIME.—The Helen Western Combination opened in Biddeford, Me., on Nov. 19th, in "Camille" and "Love in all Corners." A correspondent says:—"On the 20th they were to play 'Handsome Jack' and 'The Pet of the Petticoats,' but although they had a good paying house, the curtain failed to rise; whether they intended to return all the money, or only a part, I cannot say, but full one third of the audience still hold tickets for the show, which were not redeemed. Of course they were indignant at not receiving their money back, and talked fight, but did not come to the scratch. At this stage of the proceedings a slightly intoxicated second hand furniture dealer appeared, who wished to remove his property that had been hired for the use of Miss Western, and the said property was in her dressing room. This excited the ire of a gallant walking gent, who called for a bar of iron. The iron not appearing he contented himself with a wooden one. Placing himself in a striking attitude, he declared whoever entered the lady's dressing room would first pass over his cor part of Greppo, which he performs much better than the Niblo's Garden representative of the same character. Tony Denier as Dragonfins also makes more of the part than Hernandez makes of it at Niblo's. Tony is a very clever pantomimist, and is well up in the business of the piece. Of the others there is no need of special mention. On the evening we were present, an apology was made for Mrs. Hamilton, who was cast in the part of Carline. Indisposition prevented her from appearing, and a substitute took her place at short notice. Thus far the "Black Crook" has attracted very large audiences, although but very few ladies are present except at the matinees. As there is nothing at all in the play offensive to a fastidious taste, we can see no reason for the absence of the fair sex, who, we have no doubt, will turn out in more liberal numbers hereafter. The play runs about three hours. Altogether, the manager of the American has done much better in bringing out this sensation than had been anticipated. It promises to enjoy a run, and is just the right piece for the coming holiday season.

MARY MITCHELL and John Albaugh closed a two weeks' engagement at the Academy of Music, Louisville, Ky., on Nov. 24th. A correspondent says:—"Mary appeared as Bella Wilfer in a bad adaptation of 'Our Mutual Friend,' with Mr. Albaugh as John Rokesmith. I consider this one of Miss Mitchell's best characters; indeed, she appears to have given more general satisfaction in this than in any part we have seen. Mr. Dond appeared as Roger Riderhood. Mr. Dawson did not drop into Silas Wegg quite so deeply as I think he could. Miss Nellie Johnson, as Lizzie Hexam, was easy and graceful, and won our hearts from rise of curtain. The minor characters were all well sustained by the company. The company go from here to Albany, Ind., next (this) week, when the Hanlon Brothers open here.

AMY STONE, traveling with the "Sensation Dramatic Troupe," was the recipient of a complimentary benefit at City Hall, Burlington, Vt., on Nov. 23d. "Little Barefoot" was performed. On Nov. 24th, H. F. Stone took a benefit and closed the performances of the troupe in that town.

N. C. FORRESTER'S Dramatic Company were at Belleville, C. W., last week, where they did a good business. The present week they are at Cobourg.

ETTIE HENDERSON continued the star at Quincy, Ill., last week. Our correspondent says:—"During her engagement here she has made hosts of friends. On Nov. 16th she took her first benefit in this place. The house was filled to witness 'The Youthful Days of Richelieu' and the 'French Spy.' The performance went off well. The 'Cabin Boy' was performed on Nov. 17th."

MURRAY AND BLAKE'S DRAMATIC FORCES are at present traveling through Indiana. They have appeared in Elkhart and Goshen to good returns. On Nov. 19th they were in South Bend, and were to go thence to La Porte and Fort Wayne. They then wend their way back into Michigan, playing in Jackson Christmas week. Professionals wishing engagements with this party will find the manager's address in another column.

CARNER & WILSON'S DRAMATIC COMPANY were to open at Arcade Hall, Lockport, N. Y., on Nov. 26th.

"THE ANGEL OF MIDNIGHT" has been successfully produced at the Perkin's Theatre, Houston, Texas. Florence La Fond and J. G. Steele joined the company there on Nov. 9th.

THE NEW OPERA HOUSE, at New Albany, Ind., was to be opened on Nov. 26th by the dramatic company from the Academy of Music, Louisville, Ky. A correspondent says:—"It is the largest and most magnificent Theatre in the State, being 62 feet in width, 58½ in height, and 116 feet in depth. All the ministers in the city open their pulpit batteries on Nov. 25th. They will loudly and vehemently oppose its opening, which you well know will be a good advertisement."

JEAN HOSMER is at present resting at her home in Buffalo, N. Y. After New Year she resumes her profession at Philadelphia, and goes thence to Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Indianapolis and Memphis.

L. P. BARRETT succeeded Miss Hosmer at the Metropolitan Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., last week. Our correspondent, "Hoosier," says:—"He opened on Nov. 19th in 'Rosedale,' which attracted a crowded house. It was played all the week. Mr. Barrett is a great favorite here. He played to the largest business of last season, and, judging by the present business, he will be the trump card this season. The strength of the company is brought out in this play, with the exception of Messrs. Wallack, Smith and Rooney, who are having a rest. Mr. Riley appears as Miles McKenna, Mrs. Riley as Lady Florence, Annie Hyatt as Rose Leigh, J. H. Lord as Col. May, and Mr. F. G. White more than keeps the house in a roar as Bunberry Cobb. The 'Favorite of Fortune' and 'Hamlet' are up for next (this) week's business, also 'Richelieu.' The agent of Mr. Barrett informs me that he will open at McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, on Dec. 3d. There will be a week's business here that will be filled by the stock, after which Emilie Melville opens on Dec. 10th.....Mr. Sol. Yewell, Jr., attached to this theatre, has completed a new five act sensational drama, entitled 'The Double Marriage, or, the Curse Fulfilled,' which he has placed in the hands of Manager Riley for disposal."

FRANK LAWLOR AND MRS. EMILY JORDAN began a two weeks' engagement at the Academy of Music, Albany, N. Y., on Nov. 19th, opening in "Love's Sacrifice." On the 20th, 21st and 22nd, "Aurora Floyd" was presented with success, owing, says our correspondent "Oho," "in a great measure, to the good acting of the fine stock company at this theatre." Our correspondent further says: "To-night (Nov. 23d), Mrs. Jordan takes a benefit, appearing as Lesbia, in the play of that name. Biz for the week, so far, has been good. Next (this) week, is to be produced the 'Long Strike,' with Mr. Lawlor and Mrs. Jordan in the leading roles. If properly gotten up, the 'Long Strike' will prove a lucky strike for Manager Trimble. For the matinee, on Saturday, the 'Surgeon of Paris' was performed by the 'stock.'

SAMUEL E. BROWNE last week proved the strongest card the managers of the dramatic company—performing at Deering Hall, Portland—have yet offered their patrons. On Nov. 21st he appeared as Don Cæsar De Bazan, and on Nov. 22d as Bob Brierly in "The Ticket of Leave Man."

DEERING HALL, Portland, Me, is now open with a first class dramatic company. Stars wishing nights will find the business manager's address in another column.

JOHN S. CLARKE terminates a three weeks' engagement in Baltimore, at the Holliday Street Theatre, on Nov. 24th. Our correspondent "Don Juan" says:—"His engagement has proven a memorable one as regards the number and quality of the audiences that have greeted his every rendition. Last week he appeared in his best role of characters, Paul Pry, Toodles, Babes in the Wood, Nicholas Nickleby and Majoy Wellington de Boots. During the present (last) week he appeared in "The Member from Pike.".....On Nov. 26th Ristori makes her introductory bow before a Baltimore auditory. She has selected 'Medea' for her debut. On Nov. 27th, 'Mary Stuart;' 28th, Queen Elizabeth;' 30th, 'Macbeth;' Dec. 1st, 'Deborah;'.....Joseph Jefferson, comedian, begins an engagement at the Holliday, opening on Dec. 3d.....Max Maretzek's Italian Opera Troupe, with Ronconi, the celebrated basso, open at this theatre during the first week of the new year.....The Richings' Opera Troupe give a series of three operas at the Concordia Opera House, opening Nov. 27th, with 'Martha;' 28th, 'La Sonnambula;' 29th, 'Fra Diavalo.....Dan Bryant, the celebrated Irish comedian, opens at the Front Street Theatre on Nov. 26th."

RACHEL JOHNSON and B. Macauley succeeded Frank Mayo at the Metropolitan Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., on Nov. 19th, opening with "Nell Gwynne." "East Lynne" was played twice during the past week, also a dramatization of Victor Hugo's "Lesbia, or the Spy of Venice." Our correspondent "Charley Mayne" says: "To-night, (Nov 23d), Rachel Johnson takes a benefit, when 'Much Ado About Nothing' and 'Love in '76' will be presented. On Nov. 24th they terminate their engagement, Barney Macauley being the recipient of a benefit, when 'Macbeth' will comprise the bill. There has been a slight improvement in the attendance this (last) week over the houses of the past fortnight, and next (this) week's business will, undoubtedly, be still better, as the management have effected an engagement with Lotta for six nights. The present luminaries have met with much favor, and had the weather been less unpropitious the attendance would have been much better. Rachel Johnson's interpretation of the dual character in 'East Lynne' was correct and meritorious, her acting being unaffected. Mr. Macauley did not make as good a Sir Francis as I had supposed he would have done; still, his characterization of the roue was not without merit. I have seen the role done much worse on many occasions. James Harrison essayed the part of Archibald. In a scene with Lady Isabel he was unfortunate enough to reply to one of Isabel's interrogatories, by ejaculating: 'Am I not your wife already?' The entire audience were convulsed with laughter. Mr. Harrison, on the evening of Nov. 17th, played Richmond to Frank Mayo's Richard, and during the combat Mr. Harrison was driven off the stage and took refuge in the orchestra. Jenny Wilton deserves praise for her portraiture of Barbara Hare. The Richard Hare of H. A. Ellis was the best I have seen in some time. 'Lesbia' attracted an overflowing house on Nov. 21st. Rachel Johnson exhibited intense dramatic energy in her assumption of the title role. Barney Macauley's Orsceolo was a powerful rendition, and that he carried the house by storm may be partly attributed to his scrupulous and artistic make-up. It is a difficult role, and that he achieved a success therein is but an evidence of his talent. Harrison and Ellis were efficient in their respective characters. Mr. Ellis received several outbursts of applause, which he certainly merited, as he is invariably a painstaking actor. The Brioni of A. W. Gregory was altogether too outre. Jenny Wilton made a charming Viola."

THE THEATRICAL SEASON in Havana has now fairly set in, and the opera troupe at the Tacon Theatre is doing a good business, a correspondent informs us, who adds:—"The performances are not as good as we have seen, on account of the insufficiency of first class artists, but nevertheless they succeed in drawing large houses. There is no dramatic company performing at present, and it is undecided as yet whether the opera company of Biachi, now in the City of Mexico, or Manager Grau with Ristori will first occupy the Tacon."

"THE LONG STRIKE" has possession of the stage at the New Chestnut, Philadelphia, where its first representation was announced for Nov. 26th, under the direction of Mr. J. E. McDonough. To make the great scene of the telegraph office still more effective, the management have made arrangements with the Western Union Telegraph Company to introduce a wire into the theatre for this scene, and have also arranged to receive the latest telegraphic news up to 9.30 P. M., thus connecting the Chestnut Street Theatre with all parts of the United States, and with Europe by the Submarine Cable.

MR. AND MRS. HOWARD PAUL succeed Dan Bryant at the Arch, Philadelphia, opening on Nov. 26th. The city is liberally billed with red Napoleons.

MISS EFFIE GERMON, after an absence of three months from the stage, appears again this week at the Walnut, Philadelphia, opening on the 26th in "Jessie Brown" and "Pocahontas."

FROM ST. LOUIS we are advised of movements in the show world up to Nov. 23d. Our correspondent "Parquet" says:—"De Bar's Theatre is doing a good business with Blanche De Bar in the leading characters, generally assisted by De Bar in his favorite parts. To-night they produce 'Nell Gwynne,' with Blanche in the character vole, followed by the drama of 'Forty Thieves,' in which Ben spreads himself as Ali Baba.....The Olympic has Emilie Melville for the 'Bright particular,' and it has been crowded nightly since she made her appearance. She has been ably supported in all her pieces, as the Olympic can boast of a good stock company. To-night is to be produced 'Queen of the Abruzzi,' and 'Katy O'Shea!'.....The Museum advertises no particular star; in fact they are all stars, from the leader down to the fair haired youth that does the heavy business, moves the chairs, &c.; and the fact that the place has been crowded at every opening shows plainly that the company is a splendid one. To-night 'Ireland as it Is,' and 'Toodles,' take the boards, in which McWade, comedian, creates much merriment."

AMUSEMENTS IN CINCINNATI.—John Owens is in the third week of his engagement, which is said to be the most lucrative that has been played at the National Theatre since the time of Edwin Forrest. The indication is that he will have crowded houses until the close of this engagement.....The business at Wood's during the Owens term has not been good, although Miss Emily Thorne, who was the principal attraction, is an old favorite. Manager Allen, however, by luck or by crook, has succeeded in getting hold of the 'Long Strike,' which was produced on Nov. 22d to an audience not so large as might have been wished, or as its intrinsic merit warranted, but this must be placed to the account of the short notice that preluded it to the Cincinnati stage. It is really one of the best constructed of the dramatist's works. It is said that Mr. Allen obtained it by means of a photographic reporter who attended the Olympic, in New York, for the purpose. Sharp practice, but all right in the absence of the international copyright law.....The Transient Museum, an institution of Barnum's, is said is to be realizing an excellent business."

MR. JOHN DILLON commenced an engagement at the Academy, Milwaukee, Wis., on Nov. 20th, opening with Brougham's comedy of "Our Irish Relation," and "Eton Boy." Our correspondent, "Claude," says: "He was received by a large and fashionable audience, and was loudly applauded at each appearance. Mr. Acker, as Paul Weldon, played the character with signal success, and was also frequently applauded. Mr. Allen, as Foxglove, was particularly fine. He is one of the best old men that ever graced our stage, and always dresses his characters in good taste. Miss McWilliams played the somewhat difficult role of Alice Bevereux in fine style. Mrs. Salisbury played the small part allotted to her in a praiseworthy manner. She is one of the most useful members of the company, generally doing her part in a most satisfactory manner. In the farce, Mr. Wallace and Mrs. Holland were as usual most excellent. Miss Salisbury and Mr. Wood were also good; in fact, the whole company with few exceptions did well. On Nov. 21st, 'Paul Pry,' and 'A Regular Fix,' were played to another good house. Mr. Dillon, owing to a severe indisposition (being drunk) was unable to play on Nov. 21st. This is the second time this gentleman has suffered with the same disease while playing in this city. It is a most shameful affair, and should not be tolerated in any theatre. he is said to be suffering in the same way to-day (Nov. 22d) and will not be able to play to-night. Mr. Wallace (our favorite comedian) assumed Mr. Dillon's character at fifteen minutes' notice, and played the character just as well as Dillon could. He stated that he had never read the character before last night. He is certainly deserving of much praise for the manner in which he played the role. Mr. Bandmann, assisted by a part of Willis' company and the German company, will give a performance at the Music Hall on Nov. 23d, for the benefit of the Musical Association of this city."

"THE BRIDAL EVE," the new Irish drama written expressly for Mr. and Mrs W. J. Florence, was produced for the first time on Nov. 19th, at the Howard Athenæum, Boston. An exchange says:—"'The Bridal Eve' is said to have been written for Mr. Florence abroad. It is to be hoped so. American dramatists have enough to answer for, and even the Bowery playwright, who turns out dramas at ten dollars per week, would hardly care to acknowledge this piece, which is a weak attempt at the scenic effects of the 'Colleen Bawn' and 'Arrah Na Pogue,' diluted with the poorest pretence at plot, dialogue and incident. Mr. Florence personates a sentimental Irishman, which might be done well but for two reasons. First, a sentimental Irishman is an absurdity; secondly, Mr. Florence cannot play juvenile business. A skillful actress might make something out of the character written for Mrs. Florence, which that lady made tiresome and ridiculous—the rest of the characters are not worth mentioning. The two principal scenes of the play are very well executed, but have not enough originality to be very effective."

IN PITTSBURGH the places of amusement were well patronized last week. Our correspondent "Lisle" says:—"Vestvali has attracted to the theatre a fair attendance every night since her advent among us. On Nov. 19th 'Bel Demonio' was produced in good style, and had a successful run of four nights. The drama was favorably received, the characters excellently arranged and enacted creditably. Harry Hotio, the popular comedian and a favorite in this city, will appear on Nov. 24th, and Mrs. Sylvester's return is promised.....At the Opera House, on Nov. 19th, Mr. Hess placed on the stage the drama of 'The Romance of a Poor Young Man.' During the continuance of the play the house was well attended every evening. 'Griffith Gaunt' will be presented for the first time on Nov. 23d."

THE ACTORS' ART UNION.—At a semi-annual meeting of the Actors' Art Union, held at Philadelphia on Nov. 20, the following gentlemen were elected to serve for the ensuing six months:—President, C. S. Porter; Vice President, S. K. Chester; Treasurer, Owen Marlowe; Secretary, John M. Barron; Librarian, James Taylor; Directors, Messrs. G. H. Clarke, Owen Fawcett, W. A. Chapman, F. O. Savage, Frank Mordaunt, Frank Stulle, Robt. Struthers and Alex. Fisher. The association is in a very flourishing condition, and numbers amongst its members the leading artists of the country.

RISTORI will appear at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Monday, Dec. 10th.

"SAM" was produced at the Opera House, Rochester, N. Y., on Nov. 19, and played during the week to large audiences, with F. S. Chanfrau as Sam. On Nov. 23d, "Sam" was backed up by "Solon Shingle." On Nov. 24th, "Solon Shingle" was repeated, followed by the "Widow's Victim" and "Glance at New York." Chanfrau remains this week.

MRS. J. H. ALLEN is now prepared to make engagements through her agent, Mr. C. T. Parsloe, of this city. For precise address, see advertisement.

MAX STRAKOSCH'S ITALIAN OPERA TROUPE follows Edwin Adams at the New Memphis Theatre, commencing on Nov. 26th.

MCKEAN BUCHANAN and daughter, supported by a stock company, open for one week at Colerick's Hall, Fort Wayne, Ind., commencing on Nov. 26th.

THE NEW OPERA HOUSE, now in course of erection in Louisville, Ky., is nearly completed, and the roof is expected to be on during this week. The opening is to take place about the middle of January. It will be somewhat larger than the one recently burned down—in fact, somewhat larger than Niblo's, seating one hundred more people on the lower floor than that theatre.

FRANK TREVOR died in Australia lately.

AMUSEMENTS IN MURFREESBORO, Tenn., says our old Washington correspondent, "O. L. H.," writing from that place on Nov. 18th, "are very scarce. An occasional lecture, or a second class minstrel troupe appearing to have always satisfied the slow Tennesseans. The few Northerners residing here were agreeably surprised, a few days since, upon seeing the city well billed, announcing the entry, on the 17th, of Mike Lipman's Circus, for those who had not seen it knew by report that the exhibition was first class. Saturday, the 17th, brought Mike, with his company per rail from Shelbyville. The style in which his agent had billed the country, for miles around, brought the largest crowd I have ever seen in this town. So dense was the crowd in the streets that Mike was obliged to shorten the route for his procession. Little Mike is as genial and pleasant as ever, and sends his regards to the CLIPPER crew. He assures me that all along his route, at Winchester, Tullahoma, Shelbyville and Nashville, he has been greeted by just such overwhelming crowds. He deserves it, for his exhibition is first class. His stud of animals is as good as I have ever seen. Geo. Bachelor, leaper and gymnast, is with the concern, and proves a big card. His double somersault is a fine performance, and to comply with the clamorous demands of the audiences is repeated each performance. As a rider he is also very good. His two horse bareback act with W. Morgan was deservedly applauded. Mr. Larue's hurdle act was one of the best performances of the evening, and gained much applause. The merits of the Holland Family are so well known that I need not expatiate upon them. By their performances here they demonstrated that their celebrity was well deserved. Bernard, as master of the arena, knows his biz. Madden and King do the clowning business in first class style. King is a new hand, from Porkopolis, I believe, but he already has the air of an old stager. His gags are mostly new, and are well delivered, and were well received. If he sticks to his choice, I predict for him a brilliant future. A valuable addition will be made to this department in Nashville, in the person of Edwin Croueste, whose last performances were with Lent, in your city. Walter Wentworth as a contortionist, has now but few superiors. He has made a wonderful improvement since I saw him two years ago. Lowery is a good general performer. Mrs. Holland and Miss Day won much applause by their superior riding. Little Ella will, in time, be one of the first horsewomen in the country. Her performances were well received last evening. The fine condition of the stock shows that they have received every care from Billy Smith, under whose supervision the animals have been placed. Mr. Chas. Thompson, with his educated bears and sacred bull, afford much amusement for the freedmen, who ex necessitate constitute the largest part of Southern audiences. After the regular performance, an Ethiopian entertainment is given, under the same canvas. I regret having forgotten the name of the tambourine end, as he was decidedly good. Mike needs but a good pad rider, and he will have the best traveling circus in the country. As it is, he is far ahead of anything I have seen south of the Ohio. He is diplomatic in his manner of drawing audiences. Knowing how obnoxious Northern editors are to the majority of the people, he gives them the go-by, and inserts flaming 'ads' in the opposition papers. The gags of Madden are often such as would irritate the feelings of Northern men, but they take immensely with the chivalry. The Press and Times of Nashville comes down big on the concern. Mike's course in this particular is not to be approved, and I fear will damage his business in the North. Showmen should shun politics, or travel in but one section. The route of the exhibition is Nashville, Clarksville, Columbia, bringing up Dec. 3 in Memphis."

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST we are advised of show business by our correspondent up to Oct. 30th. He says:—"Alice Kingsbury is still the attraction at Maguire's Opera House. 'The Cricket' is her piece de resistance. She has left it occasionally for the 'Hidden Hand,' 'Satan in Paris,' Pearl of Savoy' and 'Lady of Kildare,' but the public desire has forced her back to 'Fanchon,' which is billed for to-night and Nov. 3d, making it the eighth presentation of that piece.....But two performances have disturbed the quiet of the Metropolitan Theatre during the past week—the complimentary benefit of the Misses Howson and Roncovieri's. 'Cinderella' will be given this evening.....The Olympic Theatre, under the management of Mr. W. H. Smith, is crowded nightly. Joe Murphy and Della Sager are still the favorites.....Mr. Rudolph Herold, the accomplished chef d'orchestre of the Metropolitan Theatre, is so dangerously ill that his recovery is considered doubtful.....Lady Don has been playing to crowded houses at Sacramento. The rural press have exhausted the vocabulary in her praise. She left for Marysville, and will give five performances in that city during the present week. The new arrivals from Australia—Mr. Henry Edwards and the Misses Corcoran—who are supporting Lady Don, appear to have pleased the Sacramentans. Edwards makes a feature of his elocutionary powers. His imitation of 'Eugene Aram's Dream' is described by the Sacramento Union as impressive. Edwards and Lady Don are under Maguire's management.....The 'Red Gnome' is still running at Maguire's Opera House, Virginia City, Nevada. The Opera House is under the management of MAX WALTER. MAX has leased Maguire's Academy of Music, San Francisco, and intends, with Maguire, to give variety entertainments in it."

"GRIFFITH GAUNT."—This work promises to become as notorious in its dramatic form as it did as a novel. We refer the reader to the advertisement of Kate Reignolds in another column.

MISS FLORENCE NOBLE, a pupil of George Vandenhoff, made her first appearance on any stage at the Academy of Music, Louisville, Ky., lately, as Parthenia. On Nov. 26 she was announced to appear at the Crosby Opera House, Chicago, as Hamlet. The critics pronounce her highly gifted, possessing winning manners, an exquisite voice, every word being touched by the eloquence of music. She will shortly appear in this city.

EMILIE MELVILLE was at the Olympic, St. Louis, last week, opening November 19th in "Fanchon."

"PAUVRETTE" was continued at the St. Louis Museum three days last week, followed by the Oriental spectacle of "Cherry and Fair Star."

"THE BLACK CROOK" is a great success without the aid of an expensive ballet, despite the extraordinary counter attraction of Edwin Booth, Jefferson, Dan Bryant, the Bateman concerts, the circus, etc., in Philadelphia. The vast auditorium of the New American fails to accommodate the throng that nightly presents itself for admission. The Ledger says,—"The success which has greeted the presentation of the 'Black Crook' at the New American, has been unparalleled in the history of that theatre. The seats, aisles, galleries, boxes and lobbies, and wherever there is even standing room, have been filled to overflowing."

THE PARK THEATRE, Brooklyn, was well filled last week, the attraction being the sensational drama of "Rocamboli, or the Knaves of the Pack." On Friday, Nov. 23d, the "Heir at Law" was well performed. This week Mrs. Bowers and J. C. McCollom commence an engagement there.

THE FRENCH OPERA COMPANY performed "Zampa" at the French Theatre, New York, for the first time on Nov. 22d, to a full and fashionable audience, and at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, next night, to the best house they have yet had, the opera gradually but surely winning its way in the favor of the Brooklynites. The "Child of the Regiment" is promised us, and this, in the original French style, will be a treat which will no doubt draw a full house.

RUDOLPH'S OPERA HOUSE, Springfield, Ill., is about to open for the winter season, with John Rumley as acting manager, and talent is wanted, as will be seen by an advertisement in another column.

JOHN S. POTTER was up for a benefit on Nov. 17th, at Bishop's Opera House, Council Bluffs. "The Serious Family" and the "Wandering Minstrel" were given, interspersed with singing and dancing. J. W. FOX joined the company, appearing as Charles Torrens.

KATE FLETCHER was the recipient of a benefit on Nov. 16th, at the Evansville, Ind., Theatre, personating Camille. On Nov. 19th she volunteered for the benefit of E. C. Voits.

THE WEBB SISTERS commenced an engagement at the Evansville, Ind., Theatre, on Nov. 26th. They remain two weeks, and are followed by Blanche De Bar.

JOHN BROUGHAM is the star the current week at the Boston Theatre, opening in "Playing with Fire" on Nov. 26th.

LOTTA closed an engagement at the Continental Theatre, Boston, last week. "Monte Christo," which has been in preparation for some time, was not quite ready for production on Nov. 26th, and "Cinderella" was revived.

MAGGIE MITCHELL played "Fanchon" on Nov. 23d at Corinthian Hall, Rochester, N. Y., to a fair house. On the 24th she played "Little Barefoot."

JOHN S. CLARKE will open at the Walnut, Philadelphia, Monday, Dec. 8d.

J. H. TAYLOR, tragedian, who lately supported Miss Davenport at the Winter Garden, in this city, commences a twelve nights' engagement at the Theatre, Pottsville, Pa., this week.

THORNE'S OPERA HOUSE, Buffalo, N. Y., was to be opened on Nov. 26th, with the "Hunchback" and "Sketches in India," with C. Thorne, Harry Richmond, Edwin F. Thorne, Mr. Daniels, J. H. Bensel, Ella Wren Nesbitt, Grace Darley, Fanny Young and Augusta Lamereaux in the company.

SHERRY'S NEW YORK THEATRE is meeting with the approval of the citizens of Syracuse, N. Y., where they are in their third week. Last week they gave a well selected programme, as will be seen by Manager Sherry's advertisement in another column.

Circuses.

S. H. JOSEPH, the avant courier of Mike Lipman's circus, was in Memphis on Nov. 16th, making arrangements for his show. They give their first entertainment on Dec. 3d.

MENDALE'S OLYMPIC CIRCUS will shortly leave St. Louis, taking in the river towns to New Orleans. Levi J. North is the equestrian director. The company pitch their tent in Memphis about the 10th of December.

POWER OF THE CIRCUS.—In Mobile, Ala., a circus made its appearance a few days ago; in their anxiety to see the show, a number of the depositors in a Safety Fund made a run on the institution and broke the bank.

THE STONE ROSSTON & CO'S CIRCUS has closed its traveling season in the South, and intend opening at the Front Street Theatre, Baltimore, during the present month.

THE CANTERBURY, New Haven, Conn., is now running with a large force, consisting of Jim Riley, stage manager; Harry Mestayer, leader of orchestra; Dick Bathelon, Joe Buckley, Willie De Vere, Kate Harrison, Chas. E. Toop, Chas. Blum and Billy Hart.

AT THE VARIETIES, St. Louis, J. B. Studley and Frank Swayne have become general favorites. Bowman and Harris do a double song and dance.

ROBERT BUTLER and Amelia Wells are at liberty to engage with managers during the pantomime season. Mr. Butler is a good pantomimist, comedian, comic dancer and a versatile performer. Amelia Wells is a comedienne and vocalist. Their address will be found in another column.

NEW ATTRACTIONS are continually being added to the efficient company at Aims' Varieties, Pittsburgh, Pa. On Nov. 19th the drama of the "Brigand Queen" was produced, and the characters in the play are said to have been admirably sustained by the company. Emma Fowler, said to be the only surviving one of the "Fowler Sisters," made her first appearance on Nov. 19th, and was favorably received. Emma Marsh is still greeted with rapturous applause. Nellie Howard is an inexhaustible attraction to the visitors of this resort, and the same could be said of all those at present connected with the Varieties.

FRANK WILD, the delineator of Ethiopian eccentricities, has turned up at Buffalo, N. Y., where he is at present sojourning, enjoying his otium cum dig. He has been unable to appear on the boards for a period of four months, by reason of an attack of typhoid fever, from the effects of which, however, he has now entirely recovered, and will soon manipulate the tambo as in days of yore.

CARE'S NEW VARIETY THEATRE, at Buffalo, N. Y., is rapidly approaching completion, and will be ready for occupancy in less than a month.

JOHNNY CLIFTON and Al. Pierce have joined the blackbirds at the American Theatre, Buffalo, where Dave Wilson and "Birchey" are said to have achieved a success. The "Old Uncle John" of Dave Wilson is pronounced the best old man song and dance seen in that city.

MASTER WAGNER, song and dance performer, commences at Metropolitan Hall, Washington, on Dec. 3.

MESSRS. DAVIS & CO., the dramatic agents of Cincinnati, O., advertise for a number of people for a minstrel company; also, ladies for concert hall business.

A POSE CANVAS MAN is in want of a situation. His address will be found among our advertisements.

JULIEN KENT, clown, has been engaged at Forepaugh's Circus, in Philadelphia.

IN HAVANA, Cuba, the circuses of Chiarini and Albizu are both in operation and doing well. Our correspondent, "Habanero," under date of Nov. 17th, writes as follows: "Chiarini's Circus has been entirely refitted, and presents a very fine appearance. Albizu has also put up a great many improvements, having now a small stage attached, where dances and pantomimes can be shown off to better advantage than in the ring. Both troupes are very large, although Albizu presents more of a variety than Chiarini, who confines himself strictly to the legitimate circus business. What one lacks the other has in abundance. The want of ring horses is painfully apparent in Albizu's Circus, and cannot be compared to the rest at Chiarini's. This is undoubtedly the best in America. Each circus has its big gun; Lorenzo Maya, at Albizu's, and Chiarini at his own place, having each hosts of friends, and each well deserving of it. The following is a list of the members of Chiarini's circus; Signor Sebastian, Romeo, Teodoro and Belen Cuba, Senorita Josephine Chiarini, Madlle Eloire and little Miss Kitty Holloway (Manege), and Marquez, principal riders; Duvernay, contortionist; the Nelson Brothers, Sam, Louis, Robert and John; the Miaco Brothers, acrobats and gymnasts; Prof. De Louis and his trained dogs; F. Sylvester and Jose Roman, riders; Senorita Lopez, Senorita Ruiz and Mr. Lopez, entree riders; Mr. Gispert, Senorito Barasso, and Miss A. Nixon, dancers; George Sharp is American, and Felipe Mendez, Spanish clown, and last, but not least, the active and intelligent agent, Mr. P. Picard, who seems never to get tired. The beautiful and amiable Miss Josephine Chiarini will again make her appearance in a few days, and our young dandies are already priming up to attend the circus, where she is the principal attraction. The names of the members of Albizu's Circus, are as follows: Miss Lucy Watson, Frank Pastor, Edwin Watson, Frank Robinson, C. Waterman, riders; Alex. Zanfretta, Josephine Zanfretta, Mdlle Louise, Bepo, Anetti Galletti, Cardella, and Miss Millie Young, tight rope performers, pantomimists and dancers; Jose Garcia, Madame Garcia, Hogle and Sheefe, acrobats and gymnasts; Mr. Turin and Misses Turin, trick acts and female acrobats; Ned Stanley, J. R. Campbell, G. Herman and John Prendergast, negro minstrels; E. Libby, ringmaster; Antonio Garcia, Spanish clown; and Lorenzo Maya, clown and stage manager. Which to give the preference of the two companies is hard to decide. Each is composed of excellent material. Chiarini needs a little more of the comic element, of which Albizu has so much, and Albizu would be greatly benefited if he would have some of Chiarini's horses. Signor Sebastian, with little Romeo and the Nelson and Miaco Brothers, seem to be the favorites of the visitors at Chiarini's, and Frank Pastor, Miss Watson, and Hogle and Sheefe, at Albizu's.....An Arab Circus Company, composed of more than forty persons, is now performing at Porto Rico, and will no doubt put in an appearance here shortly."

STONE, ROSSTON & MURRAY'S CIRCUS, open at the Front Street Theatre, Baltimore, Md., on Dec. 10th, with the following performers: Le Jeune Bart, Murray and Hutchinson, Den Stone, Wm. Kincaide, Penny and Goldie, James Ward, Sig. Ferdinand, the Denzer Brothers, Mad. Sophie, Le Petite Henri, the Sagrino Family, Frank Rosston, Wm. Armstrong and M'lle Hadaway. Frank Kelsh is manager.

Music Halls.

AT MEMPHIS, TENN., a new hall called the Olympic was to be opened by Messrs. McGeorge and Peterson, on or about November 20th, and they advertise for talent in another column.

C. P. KINGSLAND'S agent arrived in Memphis on the 16th ult., bringing with him, for the National, Lizzie Ellsworth, jig dancer and vocalist; Dora Escott, vocalist, and Minnie Clark, danseuse.

TALENT seeking engagements should go one good eye at least on Charles Crawford's advertisement of the Good Ides Concert Hall, Memphis, Tenn.

GUS. SHAW joined the forces at the National, Memphis, on Nov. 15th.

AT THE GOOD IDEA, MEMPHIS, C. Crawford is lessee, and the following is the company that was engaged there last week:—George Powers, Tom Clannon, M'lle Zada, M'lle Carolista and Ada Montrose.

ANNA BIRCH and LARRY TOOLEY, under engagement to the Canterbury, have gone to the Union Music Hall, New Haven, Conn.

A PORTION OF SPAULDING AND BIDWELL'S COMPANY from the Academy of Music, New Orleans, were at the Montgomery, Ala., Theatre last week.

THE VARIETIES, Detroit, Mich., is doing good business. Last week was revived the local drama of the "Streets of Detroit." This week they are doing the "Pirate's Bride," with J. S. Edwards as Gale Breezley, Harry Clifford as Bobby, Fannie Archer as Mornid and Jennie Allen as Sally.

AGNIE GIBBONS, cloggist, says, "As Mr. Goldsmith will not accept my challenge for the championship, but says he will find a lady who will dance me for all the money I can raise, I am ready for the match, and will dance the lady for $100 a side, the money to be put up immediately in the hands of the EDITOR of the CLIPPER. The dance to come off in Boston, where I have never performed." Annie should have sent on a deposit to make good what she says.

BY ADVERTISEMENT it will be seen that a danseuse is wanted at the Canterbury, New Haven, Conn.

MISS LOUISA EVANS vocalist and comedienne, and Miss Clara Day, sailed for San Francisco, Cal., on Nov. 20th, in the steamer San Francisco.

Negro Minstrelsy.

"OH! HUSH."—Tell it in the streets of Brooklyn and this city that this popular old act made famous by T. D. Rice is to be revived this week at Hooley's Opera House across the river. Gustave Bidaux was to have puts in an appearance on Nov. 26th but as he refused to sing in the chorus of "Oh! Hush," Mr. Hooley concluded that he could dispense with his services altogether. A matinee is to be given on Thanksgiving Day.

SAM SANFORD'S MINSTRELS, consisting of S. S. Sanford, Paul Berger, G. Kidwell, Bob Harrison and J. C. Keene, were at Meadville, Pa., on Nov. 20th and 21st, and were to go thence to Oil City for two days.

DIMMICK AND GREEN'S MINSTRELS is the title of a new minstrel organization started from Chicago on the 15th. The party consists of Delehanty and Harry Stanwood, who left Skiff and Gaylord's minstrels at Milwaukee on Nov. 11th; J. E. Green, Young Hengler and many others, in all numbering eighteen people. They were at Champaign, Ill., on Nov. 18th, and are to be at Indianapolis, Ind., on the 23d and 24th, and Logansport, 26th. John A. Dingess is manager, and L. M. W. Steere, agent.

SKIFF & GAYLORD'S MINSTRELS, through their agent, Wm. Foote, Jr., publish a spirited call in our advertising columns to minstrel managers.

THE GEORGIA MINSTRELS did a fair business at Music Hall, New Haven, Conn., on Nov. 21st, and gave a good entertainment. Chas. B. Grists is business manager.

BURGESS & LA RUE'S MINSTRELS were at Columbus, Ohio, on Nov. 22d, and will be in Pittsburgh, Pa., during the present week. A member of the company writing to us says:—"Cool Burgess' wife was taken with the cholera in Cincinnati the first night we were there and they left for Canada. He has not been heard of since. Cincinnati is full of the cholera, but it is kept quiet. I was glad when we got away from there. The second day after we left Cincinnati A. C. Stone died with it, and then we did commence to drink Jamaica ginger and brandy mixed. The boys have spent nearly all their salaries buying brandy and Jamaica ginger."

A CHANGE is made this week in the programme of Seaver's Minstrels over in Williamsburgh. Harry Leslie appears as Mephistophiles. Fyh Horn and Geo. Coes are noted down for new acts. Wash Norton also opens a new budget of songs and comicalities.

KUNKEL'S MINSTRELS were at Memphis, Tenn., on November 18th. A correspondent says:—"Business has been very good up to this place, where things took a change on account of the location of the hall. We have got the 'sickest' company you ever saw. I don't mean as far as talent is concerned, but broken bones, fever, and one thing and the other has troubled us. We came pretty near losing Frank Pell, as he burst an artery in the bridge of his nose, and he came near bleeding to death. We had to leave him at Gainsville, Ala.; he has joined us again but is too weak to perform. Bill Manning has been on the end with Hugh Dougherty, but he was taken sick in Memphis and goes to Haight and Chambers' circus as soon as he gets well. We go from Memphis to Brownsville and thence to Nashville."

Miscellaneous.

THE UNION HARMONIC SOCIETY, of Morrisania, N. Y., at their rehearsal on the 21st inst, passed resolutions commemorative of the decease of the late Mrs. Hewins, who was a member of their society. The resolutions were highly eulogistic of the lady's character. They also sang a dirge. This society gives a concert on December 19th, under the leadership of Prof.
